Bleacherites Hurl Barrage On Medwick After Spiking

Landis Banishes Player From Game for His Clash With Owen.

Dizzy Easily Holds Tigers to Shutout

Big St. Louis Rally With 7 Runs in 3d Inning Clinches Contest.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

Detroit, Oct. 9.—Amid the stormiest scenes in the 34 years of World Series history, which served to reduce the all-important seventh game almost to an anticlimax, Jerome (Dizzy) Dean and his St. Louis Cardinals' playmates today overwhelmed the Detroit Tigers, 11 to 0, to win the baseball championship of the world.

Tempers of fans and players alike flared up in the turbulent sixth inning, when Outfielder "Ducky" Medwick of the Cardinals and Third Baseman Marvin Owen of the Tigers engaged in a spiking duel at the hot corner.

Dean reached his peak of a sensational season in which he pitched the Cardinals into the pennant by 30 victories and set a new high mark for National League pitchers. The honor of twirling the only shutout of the series fell to the loquacious young giant from Holdenville, Okla., as he turned back the Tigers with six hits.

Dean Brothers Win Series.

Thus the Cardinals, who who had romped to the National League title in a stirring finish, rolled on to their World Series triumph—pitched to victory by the amazing Dean brothers. Every victory of the Cardinals in the series was achieved by a Dean as Dizzy and Brother Paul each turned in a pair of triumphs. No other Cardinal pitcher was able to beat the Tigers.

The reckless display of flashing spikes riding high on the baselines, which had marked this rough-and-tumble series from the outset, came when Medwick crashed into the third sack as he beat out a triple to the center-field wall, brushing Third Baseman Owen with his spikes as he reached the bag. Owen fell atop Medwick, stepping on the latter's knee, whereupon the Cardinal outfielder lashed out viciously with his feet and kicked the third baseman over.

Rushing fro mtheir respective dugouts, a dozen players reached the two players, Fred Marberry in the van o fthe Tigers and Manager Frisch leading the Cardinals, to offer

Customers, Clerks Herded in Bay With Pistols; Pair Flee With $750.

Two armed bandits last night held up eight persons in the Star Liquor Co., 513 Eleventh street northwest, robbed the manager of $750 and escaped from a pursuing clerk.

One of the men stood by the door while the other approached the cash register.

"Pull out your gun," the leader told his confederate.

"The first one that moves I'll kill," he warned customers and clerks.

The latter were held at bay by the man at the door as the leader tried to open the cash register. He failed and compelled the manager to open it.

They fled down Eleventh street and along E, where they disappeared in the crowds. N. N. Wallach, 3922 Military road, is the manager of the store.

Hauptmann Is Demanded For N.J. Trial

Governor Sends Request for Extradition of N. Y. Prisoner.

New York, Oct. 9 (AP).—Extradition of Bruno Hauptmann to stand trial for the kidnap-killing of the Lindbergh baby was asked today by the State of New Jersey.

Gov. A. Harry Moore, just before signing at Trenton the request for the alien former convict's transfer from New York, announced his State has a new witness, whose identity was withheld, who said he saw Hauptmann at the scene of the crime—the Lindbergh Hopewell home—the night the flier's first-born was stolen from his crib, March 1, 1932.

Notified by Moore over the telephone of the extradition request, Gov. Herbert H. Lehman interrupted a luncheon rally for his re-election long enough to remark:

"I will act on the request as quickly as possible."

The extradition request came less than 24 hours after Hauptmann was indicted for murder at Flemington—the country town in New Jersey where the trial will be held.

The papers, including the warrant for Hauptmann's arrest on the fatal abduction charge, were signed by

Revolt Leaders Declare Trump Card Is Yet to Be Played.

Barcelona, Spain, Oct. 8 (AP).—Former Premier Manuel Azana, one of the leaders of the abortive Catalonian rebellion, was arrested tonight, police said. Azana and Angel Pestana, an internationally-known syndicalist and friend of the imprisoed Catalonian President, Luis Companys, were arrested with an army captain named Negrano, police declared. No details were given.

Madrid, Oct. 9.—Spain's six-day red revolt was a dangerous mass of embers tonight, flaring into gunfire here and there as the conservative government of Premier Alejandro Lerroux remained in power.

Tenaciously the Socialist and Communist rebels held on in northern Spain, rallying at Oviedo, Asturias Province, and barricading themselves against attack in the city's labor district.

The army was awaiting reinforcements before attacking. Troops under Gen. Eduardo Lopez Ochoa were moving into the mining district, where rebels held other strongholds.

Ochoa's forces were reported to have encountered centers where rebels had slaughtered entire garrisons of civil guards, including their wives and families. More than 400 guards were said to have been killed.

The national death toll was impossible to count. It was estimated from 500 to 1,000, with thousands wounded and imprisoned.

Richberg Hits 'Plea of Fools' For Balanced Budget Now

Assails Advocates of Drastic Slashes in Federal Relief.

Money Plan Sound, Official Declares

Voices Confidence in Soundness of U. S. Plan for Dollar.

Chicago, Oct. 9 (AP).—Donald R. Richberg, director of the industrial emergency committee, today charged that the "political partisan" who advocated both adequate unemployment relief and a balanced budget was "trying to make a fool out of his Government."

"It is desirable and necessary to balance the Federal budget at the earliest possible moment," Richberg told a Rotary Club meeting. He said, however, that sweeping demands for drastic slashing of expenditures and immediate balancing of the budget, in the face of relief needs, were the product either of gross ignorance or political demagogism.

The only honest way to criticize Administration policies, he said, was not by a blanket complaint, but by specific proposals whereby the critic would himself assume the responsibility "for advocating either not meeting emergency relief demands, or increasing taxation or Government loans."

Vital Problems.

Declaring the most vital problems of economic recovery were the increase in private employment of industrial wage earners and in the volume of goods produced and distributed by private enterprise, Richberg asserted that the machinery for solving the problem already existed in the NRA.

Richberg assured his listeners that no hasty, blanket changes were planned in the recovery act.

"When certain statements of mine in Washington a few days ago were thought to foreshadow the early end of any restraints upon production volume or price competition," he said, "I received a terrifying amount of approval and condemnation within 24 hours."

No one, he said, who has an adequate knowledge of the problem would attempt to lay down any formula or principle to be applied rigidly in the making or revision of all codes.

"It would be a major calamity to abandon the efforts which, although only partially successful, have brought better order and health to certain industries."

Declaring that these gains must not be lost, Richberg pointed out

Fetes Cancelled as Cables of Condolence Are Sent Yugoslavia.

The assassin's shots that ended the lives of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou of France was echoed in Washington yesterday by a general cancellation of official social events.

President Roosevelt sent a cablegram to Queen Marie of Yugoslavia, saying he was "deeply shocked and grieved at the great calamity" that had befallen her and her children.

Thereafter the President called off a White House tea planned in honor of the delegates to the Congress of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale—a gathering which includes several members of European royalty, most of them friends of the slain monarch.

Flags at Half Staff.

Heads of embassies and legations ordered flags at half staff as soon as the tragic news reached them.

The Rumanian Legation cancelled a reception scheduled last night in honor of Prince Georges Bibesco and Princess Bibesco. The prince is international president of the federation.

Andre de Laboylaye, Ambassador from France, called off a dinner he was to give tonight for delegates to the F. A. I., and Secretary of Commerce Daniel Roper announced cancellation of a reception that was to follow.

Get News at Luncheon.

News of the assassinations reached the delegates while they were at luncheon in the Carleton Hotel, guests of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce.

Consort of Bibesco, Here for Aeronautic Conference, Calls Alexander One of Foremost Peace Workers of European Nations.

Princess Marthe Bibesco of Rumania mourned the death of a friend yesterday. That friend was the assassinated King Alexander of Yugoslavia.

Shocked by the news from Marseilles, the princess' first thought was one of sympathy for another friend, Queen Marie, mother of Alexander's sons.

In the death of the dictator-monarch, the princess told The Post, she saw the removal of one who was a powerful figure "for the cause of peace in Europe."

Princess Bibesco and her husband, Prince Georges Valentine Bibesco, are staying at the Mayflower Hotel while the prince is attending sessions of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

"May Be Distressing."

"The effect of Alexander's death may be distressing to Europe," she said.

While not taking an alarmist attitude, the princess quietly said it would be impossible to forecast the results which might follow the assassin's bullets.

In fact, she said, the situation was such that "anything can happen."

"Three years ago," she said, "I carried the Christmas greetings and presents from Queen Marie of Rumania to her grandchildren, the young sons of Alexander."

"During that time I was the guest of King Alexander and Queen Marie at the royal palace at Belgrade.

Shows Photo of King and Self.

This visit, which Princess Bibesco described, was in the nature of a royal "Santa Claus" mission for the reigning family of Rumania to the reigning family of Yugoslavia.

"And it was only last spring," she added, "that I last saw the king, when he visited Rumania."

Of King Alexander the Princess had many words of praise. She stressed his remarkable military people.

The Princess brought out a snapshot of King Alexander and herself,

D. C. Slum War On as Roosevelt Picks Three to Unite Projects

President Roosevelt yesterday paved the way for launching the long-delayed alley clearance program in the National Capital by appointing an agency of three to execute the terms of the Capper-Norton act.

The appointees, as forecast last week in The Post, are Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of the board of District Commissioners; Arno B. Cammerer, executive officer of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and Col. Horatio B. Hackett, director of the PWA housing division.

The President named no chairman, and his selections, recommended by a special advisory committee headed by Canon Anson gard to the official positions of the Phelps Stokes, were made with reappointees.

By uniting the three agencies in a single authority, the President laid a basis for the coordination of the three low-cost housing projects announced but unrealized in the District.

These are the $4,300,000 PWA program, the District Rehabilitation Corporation proposal, and the project authorized by the Capper-Norton alley dwelling act.

Immediate action was promised on behalf of the authority by Hazen upon being informed of his appointment.

"We will get together at once when we receive formal notice of the appointment," he said, "and we are going to step on it.

"The project is a big one. It will call for surveys, condemnation of land, legal procedure and advice, services of architects and builders.

"I think it is a fine thing to clear up alleys where crime and disease and unhappiness have existed so long. I am familiar with alley conditions. During my service as District surveyor I made several sur-

Yugoslavia Ruler Dies at Marseille; Assassin Is Killed

Royal Visitor and French Minister Shot as They Ride in Auto Through Cheering Throng.

ATTACKER WRESTED FROM MOB; WOUNDED GENERAL NEAR DEATH

Policeman Also Fatally Hurt in Rain of Bullets Which Ends Journey to Further Peace.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Marseille, Oct. 9.—King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Louis Barthou, foreign minister of France, were assassinated by a Croatian gunman this afternoon as they motored through the beflagged streets of Marseille a few minutes after the Yugoslavian monarch had stepped on French soil for a state visit.

The assassin was a 35-year-old native of Zagreb, Petrus Kalemen, who was armed with two pistols of German make, and a small bomb. Kalemen fatally wounded three men and shot eleven others, including seven women, before he was mortally wounded by police.

He never had a chance to use the bomb.

The king and Barthou were riding in an automobile with the populace of Marseille cheering when Kalemen jumped to the running board of the car at 4:10 p. m., and poured out the fusillade.

The king was shot three times—in the liver, the left shoulder, and left lung. He died in an hour.

Barthou was shot in the left forearm and a leg. The 72-year-old diplomat died of loss of blood within two hours.

Gen. Alfonse Joseph Georges of the French Superior War Council was shot in the abdomen and it was believed he could not survive.

A policeman named Galli, shot by Kalemen, died three hours later. The chauffeur of the King's car was wounded by a saber when a lieutenant colonel struck down the assassin.

Nation Aroused.

Coming as the second grave political assassination in France within two years, the tragedy stirred the nation, which had looked to the visit of the 46-year-old Yugoslavian monarch as a great political gesture destined eventually to cement the peace of the Balkans.

Queen Marie, Alexander's consort, who with him had completed a successful good-will mission to Bulgaria, escaped only because her poor health forced her to travel by train to France instead of by warship, as the King had come to Marseille. She was informed of her husband's death at Strasbourg. A special train was placed at her disposal to take her to the dead monarch.

In death, however, the King was not without a woman's care for his eyes were closed by a Mme. Jouhannaud, the wife of a city official. The dead King lay on a couch in the office of the prefect.

The assassinations threw this picturesque seaport into the wildest confusion. They came with such brutal suddenness that the King was wounded within five minutes of the time his foot first trod French soil.

Escorted by Squadron.

He had arrived in the harbor aboard the Yugoslavian crusier Dabrovnik, escorted into French territorial waters by a squadron of the French navy. Minister of the Navy Pietri greeted him aboard his ship.

With French officials and all the majesty and pomp of his high station, he took a motor launch to a special landing float, escorted by two French submarines.

A few minutes after 4 p. m., amid the cheers of a huge crowd shouting "Vive le Roi!" he landed. M. Barthou greeted him and bade him welcome on behalf of the French nation.

Driver Hits Assassin.

The King's car was the fifth in a procession. The four preceding cars were filled with police. They drove through a double lane of city police, while two squadrons of mounted republican guards, with their sabers drawn, trotted at either side of the procession.

Kalemen stood in the midst of the great crowd in the big square before the stock exchange. He

Europe Calm, Hearing Killer Was Yugoslav

Fears Stirred by Murder of King Allayed; Grief Is Expressed.

(Associated Press.)

The structure of European diplomacy trembled yesterday with the reverberations of the shots that killed King Alexander of Yugoslavia and Louis Barthou, foreign minister of France.

But even as it trembled, the news the assassin was a Yugoslav stilled the swaying.

From capital after capital came the reaction that it was fortunate for the continued peace of Europe that the nationality of the assassin minimized any possibility he was the tool of a plot originating in a nation inimical to Yugoslavia.

PARIS—President Lebrun, grieved by the death of France's distinguished visitor and France's distinguished statesman, M. Barthou, shocked by the sudden smashing of Barthou's plans for cooperation with the King of Yugoslavia, set out hurriedly for Marseille to show his own and his nation's grief by his personal presence there.

VIENNA—Austria ran wild with rumors that the Yugoslavian army was being mobilized to police the Italian and Hungarian borders and that Austria's own border guards were being strengthened.

August tKoshutich, Croation leader, predicted disorders culminating in civil war in Yugoslavia as a possible consequence of the King's assassination, which he called "a direct result of his assumption of responsibility for dictatorship."

SOFIA—The Bulgarian capital, where King Alexander and Queen Marie recently made a four-day visit to further reconciliation of the two countries, was deeply shocked by the news. King Boris telegraphed his condolences to the widowed Marie.

ROME—Italy's statesmen were deeply concerned because of the nation's unsettled relations with Yugoslavia. Barthou was to have come to Rome in a few weeks for

Death of King Stuns Belgrade; Revolt Feared

Cabinet Meets; Military Rule of Three Seen as Certainty.

Belgrade, Jugoslavia, Oct. 9 (U.P.).—Stupified by the assassination of King Alexander I, and fearing a Croatian uprising, Jugoslavia was swept tonight by a wave of apprehension reflected in a cabinet meeting at the palace.

The ministers met at 7 p. m. to discuss the crisis, and long after midnight the lights were burning in the ministerial chambers.

There was one reassuring event in the conflict of emotions. The Belgrade garrison paraded in full war equipment and repeated its oath of fealty to the royal family and loyalty to the established government.

Military Rule Likely.

The first step, it was believed, would be the establishment of a regency, probably consisting of three men—Prince Paul, the Patriarch Varnava, and the President of the State Council—to rule the nation until the coming of age of young Peter VI, who technically became the ruler upon the death of his father.

During the tense afternoon, the news of Alexander's assassination and the death of Barthou were withheld from the public.

Newspapers were forbidden to publish accounts of the tragedy, and the movies, cafes and shops were open as usual.

It was regarded as almost certain that Jugoslavia will be governed by a military dictatorship, in Peter's name. If the nation is to avoid civil war, it must depend entirely on the ability of the army to maintain control over the minority elements who oppose Serbian rule.

At Zagreb, the citizens first heard the news of Alexander's death through press dispatches. Crowds stormed the newspaper offices demanding news and waiting for bulletins. Isolated street fights broke out when many Serbs broke into violent denunciation of Croatians.

Assassin's Actions.

Also at Zagreb, it was learned that the assassin received a passport, visaed for France, on May 30. He left Zagreb September 28, an indicatino that he had long planned the deed.

The news was finally given to the public, after it had spread through Belgrade by way of German broadcasting stations.

Telephonic communication was shut off from Jugoslavia to all foreign countries, and censorship established shortly before midnight.

a conference with Premier Mussolini which it was hoped would lead to lasting Italo-French rapprochement. Yugoslavia's position with respect to Italy, recently illuminated by bitter newspaper attacks in the two neighboring nations, was to be one of the subjects the scheduled conference might have affected.

The Duce and Pope Pius dispatched messages of condolence on learning the news.

LONDON—"A terrible thing for Europe;" "plenty of cool thinking and acting needed," were the remarks of leading statesmen.

BERLIN—Chancellor Hitler sent his condolences to Belgrade and Paris.

BELGRADE—The army was relied upon to keep order until a regency is arranged to take the reins of government on behalf of young Peter, the heir of Alexander. Observers discounted the possibility of Croatians and other disaffected minority groups taking the assassination as a signal for a Separatist uprising.

U. S. Security Plan Ready December 1, Says Miss Perkins

San Francisco, Oct. 7 (AP).—Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, said in an address yesterday that President Roosevelt's Committee on Economic Security, of which she is chairman, will report its program December 1.

The report, Miss Perkins told the Commonwealth Club, will be a "comprehensive and unified program" aimed to "give protection to the individual in all the vicissitudes and hazards of modern economic life—unemployment, accident, invalidity, old age and premature death."

There is no intention of rushing at all these objectives at once, the Labor Department head assured her audience. Progress will be pushed, she explained, with great care not to disturb business recovery.

There can be no National prosperity, she asserted, without personal security.

High School Team Wins 82, Loses 3

Ashland, Ky., (AP).—Football players come and go, but it looks like Ashland high school's great record in gridiron achievement may continue indefinitely.

For nine years the Tomcats have had winning elevens and during that period scored 2,875 points against 240 for the opposition.

Since 1925 Ashland teams have triumphed in 82 games, lost only three and were held to scoreless ties four times.

From 1926 through 1931, the western Kentucky school hung up a record probably not surpassed in the United States by completing six consecutive seasons without being defeated.

The only setbacks suffered in the last nine years by the Tomcats were one loss in 1925 and two in 1932. Last fall the team won all 10 games on its schedule.

Between You and Me

"Does It Mean Another War?" Is Question in Wake of Alexander's Murder.

By Raymond Clapper

NEWS of the assassination of King Alexander and French Foreign Minister Barthou had a reception in Washington yestreday far different from the casualness with which the Capital heard of another assassination in June, 1914.

As the news flashed through the city, the inevitable question snapped back instantly:

"Does it mean another war?"

Not so with the historic slaughter of the Austrian heir-apparent at Sarajevo 20 years ago. It was black headlines, of course, but only for a day, and meant nothing much to America. It was just another assassination of a distant royal person. The next morning The Washington Post commented that his was a reminder of the peril in which kings and princes lived, a remark prophetic in a far-reaching sense not intended by the editor of The Post.

With that passing thought concerning the physical dangers hanging over royal heads, the matter was dropped. Washington returned to summer-time debate over the closing of the Tidal Basin bathing beach for lack of funds. Officials of the New Haven Railroad were indicted. Woodrow Wilson was busy with the Mexican situation. Senator Boise Penrose was threatening to disclose private information if Theodore Roosevelt did not stop attacking him.

A week later Vienna reported a scandal over the funeral conduct of volunteer firemen, who were drinking beer and eating sausages close to the royal coffin of the assassinated archduke, where they had been assigned as guards.

During a whole month there was just one faint rumble of martial drumbeats. In a short, two-paragraph dispatch on July 8, buried at the bottom of a column of more important news in The Washington Post, Paris said that Belgrade, Servia, reported extraordinary military activity in Austro-Hungary. Forty carloads of artillery were said to have left Budapest for the frontier, and feverish activity was reported along the whole northern border of Cervia. The American diplomatic representative in Servia attached no more importance to this information than did The Post's news editor, for he sent a report on it by mail to the State Department, and by the time it arrived in Washington, a European war was going on.

In fact, nobody in America was concerned and apparently few in Europe, except those in the confidence of their respective foreign offices. In Edinburgh, a militant suffragist threw a rubber ball at Queen Mary. It landed in her lap and she brushed it away with a laugh. King George dusted off his naval uniform to review the fleet. Several hundred young Americans were taking summer military training on the shore of Lake Champlain—never dreaming that many of them would wind up on the battlefields of France three years later.

Not until June 25, practically a month after the assassination, did the news leap into the black headline: "Europe Facing War."

Heavy relief disbursements by the Federal Government have upset completely the business of taking unofficial polls. One institution whose Nation-wide polls have shown uncanny accuracy in the past has made several test samplings on various questions recently and decided against a general poll. It came to the conclusion that it could not gather the right straws to show which way the wind was blowing. The chief difficulty is that its ballot lists are made up principally from telephone directories and automobile registrations plus some special lists. It has no way of reaching the millions on relief whose votes will be decisive in many localities this year. Los Angeles County, Calf., for instance, once was a Republican stronghold. Now 500,000 persons there are on relief. No straw vote would be worth reporting which did not include their ballots.

Two slogans have been coined by the Republican senatorial-congressional campaign committee:

Rumors that Leon Trotzky, exiled Soviet leader, wants to come to the United States, are being received in Washington every days. Up to now, however, the State Department says it has received no official inquiries. Until the question comes up officially, it will have nothing to say, though it is no secret that a good many officials here would rather have Mr. Trotzky 3,000 miles away. The latest report was that he wanted to come to the United States to do research work.

at the Mayflower, missing the executive session of the F. A. I. that opened later.

When this executive session opened in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building, Prince Bibesco asked that the delegates stand and observe a five-minute period of mourning.

Condolences Extended.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State Cordell Hull and foreign ambassadors and ministers were calling at the Yugoslavic Legation and the French Embassy to extend their condolences.

President Roosevelt, advised by Jesse I. Straus, American Ambassador to France, of the double killing, sent the following message to Queen Marie, the slain ruler's widow:

"Mrs. Roosevelt and I are deeply shocked and grieved at the great calamity which has befallen you and your children.

"In your hour of distress we extend to you our heart felt sympathy. In the death of His Majesty King Alexander the Yugoslav people have lost a courageous leader who worked untiringly for their well-being."

Hull Sends Cables.

Secretary of State Hull sent cablegrams of condolence to B. Yevtitch, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Yugoslavia, and to the acting Minister of Foreign Affairs of France.

To Minister Yevtitch in Belgrade, Secretary Hull sent this message:

"The Government and the people of the United States mourn with the people of Yugoslavia in the great misfortune which has come to them in the tragic death of their beloved King. On behalf of the American people I convey to you an expression of the deepest sympathy."

To Paris, Secretary Hull sent this message:

"The news of the assassination of his excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs M. Barthou has profoundly shocked the Government and people of the United States. With France we mourn the death of her distinguished statesman, whose abilities and attainments had won for him the respect and high regard of my fellowmen."

Legation in Mourning.

The Yugoslav legation, which was to have been the secene of a gay party last night honoring Capt. Tadiya Sondermayer, that nation's delegate to the F. A. I. convention, instead was a crypt-like mansion in which Charge d'Affaires Stoianovitch received scores of diplomats offering condolences.

Scarcely an hour after the news arrived, the Capital's Diplomatic Corps began a pilgrimage to the legation, which continued until late last night, to be resumed today.

First to call was Italy's Ambassador, Signor Augusto Rosso. Observers attached significance to his promptness, in view of the fact that recent events have sorely tried the relations between Italy and Yugoslavia.

Mr. Stoianovitch, who has been in charge of the legation since the departure of Minister Leonide Pitamic last spring, received the envoys and entire staffs of Cuba, Spain, Egypt and Belgium. The ambassadors from Great Britain, France, Germany, Japan and Poland, and the Irish Free State, Guatemalan, Swedish, Norwegian, Dutch and Finnish ministers had arrived before sunset to express sympathy.

Others Make Calls.

Others who made personal calls were Lieut. A. A. Pokrovsky, in behalf of Bishop Antonin of Alaska; Jonkheer van den Berch van Heemstede, Dutch delegate to the F. A. I. congress; Mme. Nicholas Rimsky-Korsakoff, and the Prince and Princess Bibesco.

Telegrams poured in from every American city in which there are colonies of Croats, Serbs and Slovenes. Dr. Joao Antonio de Bianchi, Portuguese minister, and John Peleny, Hungarian minister, telegraphed from New York.

The Yugoslav diplomatic staff consists at present of Mr. Stoianovitch, Dr. Ivan Franges, first secretary; Capt. Gordon Gordon-Smith, military attache, and Dr. Berislav Angelinovitch, press attache.

Walker Choice Over Brown Monday

Is Favored by Sentiment Over D. C. Champion at Auditorium.

THE spectacle of seeing an outsider established a sentimental favorite over a home-town boy will be one of the oddities surrounding the scheduled 10-round fight between Natie Brown, District heavyweight champion, and Mickey Walker, Jersey's 'toy bulldog,' at the Washington Auditorium Monday night.

Victorious in 14 consecutive bouts and ranked eighth among the world's heavyweights, Brown nevertheless remains an unpopular and roundly booed fisticuffer here.

Always at his best against big fellows, Walker is the pick of many to check the onrushing progress of Billy McCarney's protege. Many insist Mickey holds an edge over Natie both in speed and aggressiveness, two vital factors in the make-up of a heavyweight.

Boosts Drawing Power.

Despite a story reception tendered him when he took the District title from lanky Bob Tow recently, Brown proved conclusively both that he is a greatly improved fighter and that his very unpopularity has enhanced his drawing power.

Walker's comeback to heavyweight ranks finds him reentering a division in which he has dropped but two bouts, Max Schmeling and Risko both defeating him.

ing against reports of rebel plans to attack again tonight in several parts of the country simultaneously, especially in Andalusia.

The rebels' committee of strttegy in Madrid, interviewed in the utmost secrecy behind locked doors, indicated a trump card still remained to be played.

A revolutionary leader said a nation-wide "desperate offense" was planned "at a given signal that will launch our entire forces on the streets in one attack upon government offices, banks and other strategic centers necessary to our cause."

Cries of "long live Lerroux! Long live the republic!" resounded through the halls of Congress at the opening session. The galleries were crowded with women, weeping and waving Republican banners.

Lerroux Pledges Mercy.

"We have saved our Republic but we will be merciful to our fallen enemies," said Lerroux amid applause.

Congress was suspended after approving a law reestablishing the death penalty for the use of explosives and arms "causing injury or death to persons" for the duration of "the present abnormal period."

Socialist and Left Republican deputies were conspicuous by their absence. Most of them were in hiding or in jail. President Niceto Alcala Zamora gave orders that if any Socialist deputies entered the chamber they were to be taken to the president's office for questioning.

American Jailed.

The utmost vigilance continued in Madrid. Jay Allen, correspondent for the Chicago Daily News, was jailed for a few hours because police said a sniper had been firing from the vicinity of his living quarters.

United States Ambassador Claude Bowers protested to the foreign office, and Allen was released. He had a penthouse apartment on Alcala street, which was searched three times in 24 hours.

At Barcelona, seat of the abortive Catalan rebellion for independence called to coincide with the Leftist revolt, court-martials were called against national army officers involved. Government forces began a mop-up campaign in the province.

The general strike was terminated in most large cities of Spain, including Barcelona.

taken on her Christmas visit to Belgrade.

In it she pointed out how well it depicted the military carriage and proud firm chin of the now dead king.

"As a soldier and a king," she said, "King Alexander led his people into battle."

Alexander also was a friend of her husband, she said. This friendship was born when both were classmates at the same school in Geneva.

Womanlike, the Princess Bibesco was full of sympathy for the widowed queen, with her young children.

Windows Go Crash As Actor Pays Off World Series Bet

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., Oct. 9 (AP).—Not more than 15 minutes after Owen had grounded out to Durocher, forcing Rogell at second and giving St. Louis the World's Series, six windows went "crash" at the Beverly Hills home of Roscoe Karns, film comedian.

Karns and Alexander Hall, director, made a bet. Hall took St. Louis, Karns the Detroit Tigers. The winner was to take six baseballs, stand 60 feet 6 inches—the distance between the pitcher's box and the plate on a regulation baseball diamond—from the loser's home, and peg away at windows.

Immediately after the game ended, Hall took his position and fired away.

Windows in a lovely glass-inclosed sun porch were shattered by six baseballs.

Briton Urges A. F. of L. Fight On Dictatorship

Italy and Germany Cited as Examples of Peril in Fascism.

San Francisco, Oct. 9 (AP).—An appeal for the assistance of American labor in building up "a mass of hostile opinion" against such dictatorships as those of Italy and Germany was made to the American Federation of Labor convention here today by Walter M. Citrine, secretary of the British Trades Union Congress.

Citrine referred to the fascism of Italy and Germany as "the greatest danger to Democratic institutions today." He said not less than 2,000 persons had been killed in a "reign of terror" accompanying the rise of fascism in Italy, and that similar things had occurred in Germany.

"But for the financial help of reactionary employers," he said, "fascism would not have been possible in either country."

Fight Awaited.

While awaiting a report that would bring the fight between the building trades council and three "outside" constructions unions to the convention floor, the federation passed resolutions designed to help public schools, and one assailing the labor policies of Kohler & Co., Wisconsin manufacturing firm whose employes recently went on strike.

Delegates said they expected the building trades dispute to come before the convention shortly for a finish fight.

The building trades group has refused to readmit the three "outside" unions—the bricklayers, the carpenters and the electrical workers, with a total membership of 375,000—to the department. The federation executive council declared the building trades action illegal.

Unless an adjustment committee settles the issue shortly, the dispute will be taken to the federation convention floor.

Liberty Destroyed, Charge.

The British delegate charged the dictatorships of Italy and Germany had destroyed personal liberty, crushed trade unionism and reduced the citizenry to serfdom.

In Italy, he said, the Fascist regime reduced wages, lengthened the working day by two hours, cut overtime pay and increased the taxes of the farmers and the poor.

Speaking of Germany he said there was no free press, no right of public meeting and no intellectual liberty.

"Labor was enslaved," he added.

"Trade unionism," Citrine concluded, "has started its combat against the growth of fascism by opposing dictatorships of all kinds.

Boycott Urged.

"Assistance must be given to the building up of such a mass of hostile opinion as would show Fascist government that fascism does not pay. One of the most potent means has been the boycott. Germany is the key to the situation and the boycott should be strengthened and extended by every possible means."

The resolution criticizing labor policies of the Kohler Manufacturing Co. declared officers of the Kohler Co. "disregarded and violated section 7 (a)" of the NIRA by declining to let its employes organize in the way they desired. It asserted a company union had been forced on the employes.

The resolution directed federation officers "immediately make a most vigorous protest to the National Labor Relations Board for its ruling permitting the name of the company union, which it itself had declared illegal, to appear on the election ballot." It was voted to "take this protest to the President of the United States if necessary, to remedy a great wrong."

France Fears Killings Doom Pact With Italy

King's Visit Intended to Reconcile Yugoslavs and Il Duce.

Paris, Oct. 9 (AP).—France, which planned with great hope the visit of King Alexander, feared today her Danubian political policy may be shattered by the assassination of the king and Louis Barthou, French foreign minister.

Barthou was the master mind of the pretentious plan to reconcile Yugoslavia and Italy so Mussolini could be drawn into a peace pact in Central Europe with the Little Entente.

Premier Gaston Doumergue presided at a hastily called cabinet meeting and arranged to go to Marseille tonight with President Albert Lebrun, Edouard Herriot and Andre Ttadieu.

They will arrive at the same time as Queen Marie of Yugoslavia, en route to Marseille from Strasbourg.

The government sought every means of showing grief to avert any unfavorable outburst in Yugoslavia, which might loosen the bonds which since the war have made France a directing force in politics of the Little Entente.

Censorship Imposed.

Censorship was imposed to prevent any damaging interpretation being suggested from Paris by European correspondents. All flags, civil and military, were put at half staff.

A proclamation, signed by Premier Doumergue, expressing grief of the nation, will be posted throughout France tomorrow.

The assassination creates also a difficult situation for the Doumergue cabinet at home. Barthou must be replaced as foreign minister. Albert Sarraut, minister of the interior, may be forced to resign. The premier may take the foreign ministry temporarily, but eventually Herriot may take the office unless there is a complete change.

Sarraut, as head of all of the police system of France, bore the responsibility to protect the King. Unusual precautions were taken at Marseille because it long has been known there was unrest in Yugoslavia and protests against the King's long-standing dictatorship.

King Reported Restive.

While the King's visit was intended to aid in healing the soreness between Italy and Yugoslavia, diplomatic reports from Belgrade recently showed the King was growing restive at Barthou's efforts to quiet Yugoslavia so France could reach an accord with Mussolini.

The government attempted to ease the tension by calling attention to the fact the assassin, Kalemen, was a subject of the slain Alexander, and carried a passport with a Yugoslav visa to come to France. Barthou's death enabled Doumergue in a proclamation to show that France also suffered.

The proclamation said, "at Alexander's dying, Louis Barthou, minister of foreign affairs, likewise was mortally hit. In the mourning which unites them, two peoples will feel more than ever one in heart and thought."

Barthou will have a national funeral. It was possible Alexander would be taken home for burial aboard the cruiser on which he came, escorted by the French fleet.

Festival Shattered.

The tens of thousands of flags which were flown in greeting to King here and Marseille suddenly were tied in crepe. The King was to have been given more than a royal reception. Lebrun, Doumergue and Barthou had planned a five-day festival.

The joy of an expected political triumph in a flash became a disaster. An entire floor had been reserved at the Hotel Crillon for the royal party.

The foreign office acros the street from the Orsay Station, where the King was to have arrived, was gaily decorated. All of this hastily was taken down and the flags were crepe covered.

A rightest crowd, its feeling running high, attacked vendors of the Socialist newspaper Populaire. Police were called to protect 48 young men who called for papers at the plant.

Barthou's Hate For Germany Swayed Career

Assassin's Victim Ranked Among Most Able of French Statesmen.

By Robert Talley.

The assassin's bullet that killed Foreign Minister Barthou, 72, of France, as he rode through Marseille streets yesterday with King Alexander of Jugoslavia, likewise a victim, brought a dramatic end to the long career of one of the most colorful figures that the French republic ever has produced.

Man of music, art and letters . . . statesman, scholar and diplomat . . . veteran of a dozen cabinets and 40 years in the political service of his country . . . implacable and hereditary foe of Germany, Louis Jean Barthou was a most able and versatile statesman.

His lifelong enmity toward Garmany many of the important steps in his lengthy career.

It began in 1870, when, as the 8-year-old son of an impoverished village tinsmith, he saw the victorious Prussian cavalry sweep triumphantly into his native town of Orolon-Saint-Marie and levy a heavy tribute therefrom. It found expression early in 1914, when, foreseeing another Franco-German war, he forced an increase in the French army, which is credited by historians with having thwarted Kaiser Wilhelm's boast that he would eat his Christmas dinner in Paris. It was intensified in 1916 when his only son, a lieutenant in the Fernch army, was killed in action at Verdun. He enjoyed revenge after the war, when he took a leading part in slicing up the once powerful German Empire and reducing it to a shadow of its former greatness. Death interrupted him at his last task—that of making defensive alliances between France and other nations by which he was drawing an encircling ring of steel tighter and tighter around Hotler's Germany.

Other Motives for Acts.

But it was not alone his hatred for France's traditional enemy that motivated Foreign Minister Barthou. He believed that the peace of Europe—the peace of the world, for that matter—depended on holding Germany in leash. The fruits of Versailles were not to be lost if his strategy and acumen could prevent it. Hitler's Germany, struggling to throw off the bonds of the treaty, was to be held in check at all costs.

So up and down Europe Barthou traveled, welding the chain to bind France's traditional foe. In London, it is said, he perfected a Franco-British agreement to guarantee the neutrality of Belgium in the event of another invasion. In Warsaw, he patched up a Franco-Polish alliance that has been slipping as the result of Hitler's concessions to the Poles. In the Balkans, he won support for France when he promised the Little Entente "if one square centimeter of your territory is invaded, France will be with you." To Soviet Russia, it is said, he extended France's hand of friendship and received Russia's promise of support.

One of the most important, and significant, of his achievements came just recently when he played a big part in getting Russia into the League of Nations. Not only was Russia made a member of the league, but it also was granted a permanent seat in the council as well.

Death came to Barthou shortly after he had sought to improve France's relations with the dynamic Mussolini, who keeps Austria and Hungary in hopeful dependence on Italy. As it turned out, the last act that he had scheduled was a conference with King Alexander of Jugoslavia, who was jealous of the aspirations of Mussolini in Austria. The links in his chain were nearly complete.

Rapidity of Moves.

Most remarkable in the story of aBrthou's diplomatic triumphs he had accomplished al lthis in the comparatively short space of time since last February when he was called from retirement by the the most serious internal crisis that "little revolution" whcih produced France had known since the establishment of the Third Republic.

Dissatisfaction with an inefficient and unpopular government and fired by the ever-growing fear of insecurity in the face of Paris. The Stavisky scandal touched off the spark that set France aflame—but the real causes lay deeper.

Hundreds were killed in fierce street fighting. The Chautemps cabinet fell, followed almost immediately by that of Premier Daladier. It was an hour when strong men were needed—men who could save France. In desperation, Presierable former Premier Gaston Doudent LeBrun called upon the venmergue to emerge from retirement and form a cabinet that could command the public's confidence and put an end to the disorders. The aged and popular Doumergue responded and one of the first men he summoned to aid him in bringing order was Barthou, whom he made his foreign minister. This succeeded where the others had failed.

Of Humble Origin.

Like many other great statesmen in France's history as a republic, Louis Jean Barthou rose from humble origin. As a boy, he had helped his tinsmith father mend the pots and pans of French housewives in his native village and as he grew older Pere Barthou, by heavy sacrifices, has succeeded in putting his son through a law course at the University of Bordeaux.

In 1889, at the ag eof 27, young Barthou began his political career when he defeated a millionaire opponent in his local district for a seat in the Chamber of Deputies. Five years later he entered upon the first of his many terms as a cabinet member, when he was named minister of public works by Premier Charles Dupuy. Another youngster of promise who made his debut in that cabinet was Raymond Poincaire, later to become president of France.

In the next 20 years, Barthou served under a number of premiers and held, at various times, practically every post in the cabinet. In 1913 he became premier himself and with the foresight that always marked his actions, he seemed to sense that war with Germany was not far distant. At any rate, he forced through the chamber an act—then highly unpopular—that lengthened the period of compulsory military service in the French army from one to three years. In 1914, when the Germans were at the very gates of Paris, he was credited with having saved France with this measure which strengthened its army.

Overthrown as premier as the result of opposition to a financial program he proposed, Barthou was recalled to the public service shortly after the war began as a member of the French War Council. When hostilities came to en end with France and her allies victorious, he took a leading part in the division of Europe along post-war lines and in the imposition of a heavy indemnity on Germany.

Return to Cabinet.

Returning to the cabinet in 1922, Barthoux served, at intervals, until his retirement in 1930 at the age of 68.

A man of broad culture and a member of the cock-hatted French academy, the veteran statesman also had a record of achievement in fields far removed from politics. His versatile ability found its outlet as an author, an historian, a musician and an authority on rare art treatures.

Oddly enough the best known books of this famous diplomat do not deal with politics, but are based on the love affairs of great men, of which he seems to have made a special study. One of his volumes has the intriguing title "The Prodigious Lover," and gives an intimate picture of the romances of the composer Wagner. Another is "The Loves of a Poet" and has to do with the affairs d'amour of Victor Hugo.

New Sarajevo Austrian View In King's Death

Croatian Leader Declares Civil War May Result in Yugoslavia.

Vienna, Oct. 9 (AP).—Political circles were in turmoil today upon receipt of word of the assassination of King Alexander at Marseille.

It was compared to the shots fired at Sarajevo by one government minister who said the European situation may be affected sharply.

The Croatian Leader August Koshutlich said disorders culminating in civil war in Yugoslavia may be one result, adding that the assassination was "the direct result of his assumption of the responsibility for the dictatorship."

"His death means," Koshutlich said, "that the dictatorship has definitely failed.

"Only immediate action by the government in returning the power to the elected representatives of the pople can prevent serious trouble. I Irgret this was not done before.

"No Serbian domination in Croatia can last if peace is to be kept. However, I wish to emphasize that neither I nor the Croatian people approve to the assassination."

The Qugoslavian legation was unable to suggest what steps will be taken to provide for a regency Peter.
council for the young Crown Prince

The Austrian foreign office expressed consternation and deep sympathy for the Yugoslav royal family.

In anti-French quarters it was suggested that the shots fired on French soil may lead to the breaking away of the little entente from French influence. In this connection it was recalled that Germany for many months has been seeking to gain Yugoslav friendship.

Ruler in Tune With Times

Alexander Known to Subjects as Soldier King After Leading Serbian Army in World War; Family Man, Was Radio and Film Fan.

Handsome Dictator-King Alexander of Yugoslavia, although his regime was unpopular with many of his liberty-loving subjects, was to the day of his death remembered as the soldier-king, who led the Serbian army against the Austrians.

He was in tune with the times, evidenced by the trip on which he met his death. The visit to foreign ports was to cement his country's pacts with France, to counterbalance the recent delicate Yugoslavian relations with Mussolini's Italy.

Alexander helped make history in Europe since the day he was born 46 years ago in the tiny town of Cettigne, then capital of the mountainous state of Montenegro.

The early years of his life he spent abroad, being educated in Geneva, Paris and Petrograd. Then he returned to aid his father, Prince Peter, and to take an active part in the first and second Balkan wars of 1912 and 1913.

Shared in Horrors.

After the shot at Sarajevo Alexander as prince regent led the Serbian army throughout the great war, sharing all the difficulties and horrors of the heroic retreat through Albania.

Alexander was passionately fond of his children and his music. Modest, he never touched the keys of a piano outside the royal palace, but there intimates of the family listened while he played Yugoslav folk songs and his wife, the former Princess Marie of Roumania, sang.

The Queen was his constant companion on long drives the monarch took in the afternoons from Belgrade. To country folk near the capital he was a familiar figure. Often he stopped at peasants' cottages to talk over problems of agriculture.

For exercise, the Slav King took long walks in the fields near the palace, unguarded, alone. He played tennis on the royal courts or rode horseback through the palace grounds.

Always the King was interested in things French. When his radio set could not pick up the broadcasts from the Eiffel Tower he complained so vigorously that American radio experts in Belgrade made a set and presented it to him.

He was a constant patron of the theater, the opera and especially the motion pictures.

Fond of Movies.

In the palace he had a motion picture theater installed, and frequently invited friends and associates to see American films.

During the infrequent periods when the King managed to leave Belgrade for a week-end he went to the regions of Yugoslavia, where he could hunt wolf, bear, fox, chamois and stag. To the peasants of the hunting regions he was "Little Father." They always addressed him with the familiar "thou."

Alexander smoked many sigarettes, drank dark wine moderately, and was an omniverous reader—especially those books dealing with political, economic and military matters.

Slight, but of military bearing, mustached and bespectacled, American visitors to the palace were often srtuck by his facial resemblance to President Wilson, whom Alexander admired greatly.

Fight Cloaked Slayer, Belief Of Eyewitness

Police Attention Drawn From Royal Car, Writer Says.

By Francois Cassini
(United Press Staff Correspondent).

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Marseille, Oct. 9.—I have just witnessed the most frightful political slaughter in continental postwar history, a heart-sickening event in which two national leaders were shot down in cold blood—the King of Yugoslavia and our own foreign minister, Louis Barthou.

As his majesty's automobile slowly turned the corner from the Quai des Belges, I was standing with the crowd near the Bourse de Commerce. From behind me came a few derisive hoots, I believed for the moment from the mouths of radicals. But there was an immediate answering shout from the crowd, madly applauding and cheering as the King came into view.

A fist fight——apparently carefully planned—broke out near by, and while the attention of police and the crowd was directed to this development, the assassin, bald and well dressed, stepped directly into the street.

Fires Deliberately.

As in a slow-motion picture, I saw him raise his arm, a heavy revolver resembling a miniature machine gun, in his hand. Apparently without aiming, he fired deliberately—six shots at least. As he fired he advanced to the running board, leaped upon it and steadied himself with the other hand. Another burst of revolver shots followed.

Immediately there was the maddest disorder. The horrified, milling crowd shrieked. Police shouted commands, rearing their horses and attempting vainly to fight back the crowd.

I saw the military chauffeur courageously rising and swinging his first against the assassin, knocking him backward. The shots went wilder, and Barthou and Gen. Alphonse Georges fell. Another uniformed office, probably a Yugoslavian military aid, dropped wounded.

Instantly, Lieut. Col. Piollet, of the French 141st Infantry, dashed to the side of the motor car and crashed his saber three times into the face of the assailant, knocking him to the street.

Despite Piollet's onslaught, the assassin forced himself to a half-sitting position and found strength to fire twice more.

The mob and police joined in a mad rush toward the spot where the man, blood streaming from his face, was firing desperately to the end. He disappeared under the tramping feet of humans and the beating hooves of the Cavalry horses.

Mob Rips Clothing.

The crowd was determined to lynch him. It tore at his body, ripping his clothing to shreds and destroying many of the marks that might have quickly identified him. The police had great difficulty in rescuing the man—he had become a corpse by that time—from the frenzied mob.

At the prefecture, my colleague, Roger Reynaud, was waiting when the speeding automobile swung up to the doors. Reynaud helped raise the bleeding body of the king from the back seat, and carried Alexander from the automobile to the prefecture.

"It seemed to me," he said, "that the king was already dead when we reached the prefect's door."

"As I lifted the king from the cushions, I noticed two crimson spots on the right side of his uniform.

"Alexander was then unconscious. We laid him on a couch in the reception hall, and a military doctor arrived within a few minutes. He felt for a heart beat and there was none. His majesty was dead."

Queen, on Train, Weeps at News; Hastens to Bier

Lyon, France, Oct. 9 (AP).—Queen Marie of Yugoslavia, rushing aboard a special train to the death chamber of her husband at Marseille, became ill tonight at Lons le Saumier. A local physician treated her for shock.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Besancon, France, Oct. 9 (U.P.).—Queen Marie of Yugoslavia arrived here on the Oriente Express to learn of the tragedy from the prefect of the department of doubs.

Illness, and a dislike of cruising, had prompted her to leave the warship on which King Alexander was travelinf, and make the remainder of the journey by land.

At Zurich, Switzerland, the queen began to suffer from a toothache, she remained in her compartment when the train halted, shortly before 1 p. m., at that city.

As the train, with its special royal coache, came to a halt, Prefect Peretti Della Rocca swung aboard and was admitted to the private apartments. He told Marie he had grave news for her. The King had been wounded. Then, unable to keep back the truth, he told her of his death.

Marie burst into hysterical weeping and broke down. The blinds of her carriage were drawn.

A guard was placed aboard the train, and the royal coach was switched to a train bound for Marseille. The prefect continued the journey with the weeping queen, to make arrangements for expediting the journey to the southern seaport, which should be reached tomorrow morning.

"Please let no one touch the King's body until after I have seen him," she wired authorities at Marseille.

The train pulled away from Besancon with its darkened railway carriage. Throughout the night and tomorrow it will be preceded by a pilot engine, and at every station there will be a guard.

AAA Will Give $403,000,000 More in Relief

Relief Plan Is Announced as G. O. P. Attacks 'Election Buying.'

By Robert C. Albright.

A flood of $300,000,000 more in farm benefit checks and another $103,000,000 for cattle and sheep purchases will be poured into the farm belt before the first of the year.

This was announced last night by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as the Republican National Committee issued another blast charging that the New Dealers, by their own statements, "are using taxpayers' money as a campaign fund."

The impending flood of AAA money will be larger than the total amount hitherto distributed since the establishment of the New Deal farm relief agency. During 1933 and 1934, up to September 1, AAA distributed $294,809,568 in rental and benefit payments. Another $58,000,000 was disbursed between September 1 and October 5, bringing the grand total to about $352,000,000.

Actual disbursements for farm aid of every sort will have reached nearly $1,000,000,000 by January 1.

Democrats Cite Relief.

Democratic campaigners are citing these and other relief outlays in appeals to voters. Specific details of payments by States and counties are being broadcast by the Democratic National Committee. News reports to this effect yesterday drew from Chairman Henry P. Fletcher, of the Republican National Committee, a renewal of his charge that Democrats are using relief money "in a way designed to influence the approaching election."

"Fgures have ben compiled by Government departments and delivered to Emil Hurja, executive director of the Democratic National Committee," Fletcher declared last night.

"They are the fulfillment of the invitation contained in the guidebook for Democratic candidates issued by the Democratic National Committee, that the amount in which each State participated in all forms of emergency relief would be supplied Democratic candidates and speakers on request."

Farm Income Increase.

A tabulation of farm payments by States and counties was included in yesterday's AAA summary of disbursements to date.

The AAA figures tally with estimates of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which place cash income of farmers for the calendar year of 1934 at approximately $8,000,000,000, compared with $5,000,000,000 income in 1933, and $4,333,000,000 in 1932.

The Federal Government's contribution to this income was supplied largely from cotton, wheat, tobacco and corn-hog disbursements itemized in the $352,000,000 paid over through October 5.

"Also contributing to farm income are expenditures totaling $101,308,068 in the purchase of surplus hogs, butter, cheese and cattle; in export operations for wheat, and in conservation of seed," the AAA added.

Although Texas led all other States in benefits received through September 1 with $59,818,355, other millions were thrown into former Republican strongholds in the West and North, where Democratic Senatorial and Congressional candidates are at grips in election contests.

Into Kansas $20,947,387 was dispatched over the last two-year period; Iowa benefitted by $15,283,866; North Dakota received $10,490,032, Missouri $10,488,116, Otio $8,454,594, Indiana $6,327,132, Illinois $2,856,627, Wisconsin $1,907,629, and sparsely populated Wyoming, $289,058.

In 24 States, where the drought made inroads on crops, disbursement of benefit payments amounted to $242,942,882.

Cotton growers received the bulk of rental and benefit payments paid out, a total of $152,903,516, the agency reported. Wheat producers received $70,505,594; tobacco growers, $15,978,733, and corn-hog raisers, $55,421,723.

G. O. P. Favors 'Proper Relief.'

Renewing charges that the Administratio is disbursing such mon ministration is disbursing such money "with a view to influencing the results of the coming election," Chairman Fletcher insisted the Republican party "is not and will not be opposed to proper relief."

"It has the same sympathy that the New Deal has for our fellow citizens in want," he said.

He declared Postmaster General Farley "flippantly" evaded his charges of an attempt to influence the elections.

Following is a tabulation by States of AAA rental and benefit payments up to September 1:

Prince George Will Get Dukedom, London Hear

London, Oct. 9 (AP).—Announcement that Prince George is to be made a duke will be made shortly, a high authority said today.

The probability is that he will be named Duke of Kent, with King George conferring the dukedom upon him in connection with the prince's marriage next month to Princess Marina of Greece.

King Alexander, Barthou Killed By Slav Assassin in Marseille

French General Is Near Death After Attack on Royal Car.

wedged his way through the police line.

The assassin jumped on the right-hand running board. The chauffeur smashed him on the face with his fist, but Kalemen clung to the driver's coat.

Kalemen jerked two pistols out of his pockets and fired point blank at the King, at Barthou, and at Georges.

Instantaneously Lieut. Col. Piollet, riding alongside, whirled his horse and cut Kalemen twice with his saber.

The assassin rolled to the ground, bleeding, as the crowd momentarily gave way. As he lay on the pavement he fired several more shots, which wounded spectators.

Policemen cut loose with their guns as he lay there. He never had a chance to pull the bomb out of his pocket.

Then, with cries of fury, the crowd rushed forward. The police who had shot him rushed in and saved him from the mob. They carried him, dying, to a nearby news stand. He died within two hours in a police station.

King Unconscious.

The chauffeur of the king, despite his wound, drove the car on to the prefecture. The wounded king was carried in and put down on a divan.

He never regained consciousness after the shooting. He died there garbed in the full dress uniform of an admiral. Across his chest was the ribbon of the grand cross of the French Legion of Honor. Around his makeshift death bed stood a cordon of French officials, some weeping.

This is Col. Piollet's description of the assassination:

"The automobile of King Alexander, in which were the King, M. Barthou and Gen. Georges arrived exactly before the stock exchange at the corner of Queen Elizabeth street when I saw a man leave the crowd, pass by a policeman at the edge of the sidewalk, and start toward my horse.

Whirled Horse in Vain.

"He forced my horse around and leaped on the running board of the running automobile. I whirled my horse sharply, but so quick was the man that I could not prevent him putting his arm over the door of the open car. He fired two or three times on the King.

"I lifted my sabre and with two slashes knocked down the man who tumbled to the ground while the chauffeur started ahead.

"The assassin, still on the ground, continued to fire, some bullets hitting policemen and women in the front row of spectators. Police rushed forward, while mounted guards surrounded the royal car to hold back the crowd, which was filled with fury.

"The assassin was lifted and the crowd surged forward and would have killed him if the police had not carried him to a newsstand."

The scene in the prefecture where the King's body lay was one of poignant grief, enhanced by the fact that the King, whom the French press called the "Knight King" and the "Soldier King," had been killed on French soil.

His majesty was attended by several military surgeons and four local doctors, but they could not save him.

The King was laid out on a divan covered with green silk. His hands were joined across his chest while the French tricolor was draped across his legs. His face was calm and pale. Guarding his body were two French gardes mobiles with drawn sabers. The flickering light of two small candles glinted on their blades.

Blood Donor Called.

Barthou died in the hospital Hotel Dieu. Three physicians were in attendance. Some said the shock of Alexander's assassination, ending one of Barthou's fondest dreams for peace, had much to do with the aged statesman's death. He was bleeding badly and physicians, who at first thought his wound slight, sent an urgent call to a regular blood donor.

Barthou was able only to mumble as he died and his last words were: "I am suffering. I am thirsty."

The preliminary police investigation disclosed only Kalemen had been involved in the shooting. Brief questioning by the police brought nothing from him.

They discovered he was 35 years old and a Croatian, from his passport, issued last May.

Slayer Shot by Officers, Rescued From Mob Only to Die.

King Alexander himself had chosen Marseille as the place for his arrival in France. He wanted to pay his homage here to the Yugoslavs killed in the allied service during the World War.

President on Way.

One of the King's last acts was to receive a salute from a group of Yugoslavian veterans on the waterfront.

President Albert Lebrun was on the way from Paris tonight to pay his last honor to his veteran right-hand man, Barthou, and to King Alexander.

There was a gray-haired man without international importance who stood tonight and wept for the king. He was the old valet de chambre of Alexander.

He stood at the head of the death-divan crying bitterly, for he had been young Alexander's guardian when Alexander was only a Prince of Serbia and had stood by Alexander when he was crowned King of Yugoslavia.

Car Forced Off Road, St. Louis Crusader Hurt

St. Louis, Oct. 9 (AP).—C. Arthur Anderson, crusading prosecuting attorney of St. Louis County, was cut and bruised early today when his automobile was crowded off a county boulevard by a large sedan in which three men had pursued him for almost 10 miles.

The car which hit Anderson's light coach and sent it veering into a telegraph pole, stopped 200 yards farther on, the prosecutor said. One of the occupants alighted and ran back to inquire: "Well, you— How do you like that?" then departed.

Frostburg, Westvaco Take Soccer Openers

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—The newly organized Frostburg Eagles and the Westvaco A. A., of the Tri-Towns, got away to winning starts while the Celanese A. A., 1933 champions, were held to a 1-1 draw by the Lonaconing Athletics in the opening contest of the season in the Allegany County Soccer League.

Frostburg blanked the CCC camp booters of New Germany, 3 to 0. Westvaco showed plenty of scoring punch in subduing the Bond CCC camp eleven at Potomac Park, Westernport, 6 to 0. Celanese ran into a Tartar in the reorganized Lonaconing team and had to battle hard to hold the A's to a draw at Lonaconing.

Assails Those Who Seek Drastic Slashes in Federal Relief.

that their preservation was in some cases dependent upon the maintenance of controls to which many business men were sincerely opposed and upon which the public looked generally with suspicion and hostility.

Cause for Hostility.

This suspicion and hostility could be dispelled, he said, if two principles were made effective.

"First, there should be a clear line drawn between the right of business men to associate freely for the preservation of fair competition and the illegality of association for the purpose of preventing or restricting fair competition," he said. In this connection he took occasion to assert that he was opposed to any form of Socialistic State control of industry.

"The second principle," he said, "is this: Whenever, to conserve natural resources, or to maintain decent wages and protect a fair return on investments, or prevent clearly unfair competition, it is necessary to exert any restraints upon volume of production or price competition, two safeguards should be employed.

"The first is formation and administration of such code provisions by those truly representative of a large majority of the volume of business and of the number of separate enterprises engaged therein. The second is a close and detailed supervision of the process of self regulation by competent and impartial representatives of the Government."

"There is, therefore, in what I have said no threat of sweeping changes or the application of any novel theories, but merely an indication of what trend in the administrative interpretation of the recovery act which may lead toward permanent legislation."

Answers "Uncertainty" Charge.

In answer to charges that uncertainty over administrative policies was retarding business, Richberg declared that no other President had taken the Nation so fully into his confidence.

The "Roosevelt dollar," he said, by all tests of purchasing power, should be regarded as exceptionally sound.

"It seems to me that the President, who has maintained for us a sound dollar in the face of extraordinary pressure to adopt inflationary and deflationary measures, can be better trusted to control our monetary policy than the political orators who in their ignorance glorify either a fixed but cruelly deflationary dollar, or a wildly inflationary one," he said.

The Administration, said Richberg, was "dedicated heart and soul to the preservation of our ancient liberties and to the maintenance of a political economic system of competitive individualism, civilized by a social conscience."

Referring to the labor relations policies of the recovery program, Richberg said it was unfortunate that so many employers did not realize that their difficulties with labor organizations were largely "the product of their own persistent and often vicious opposition to such organizations."

veys of alleys and submitted recommendations to the commissioners."

Parks to Be Established.

Some of the alleys will be converted into minor streets, Hazen said, while parks and playgrounds can be established where alley dwellings are razed.

The alley authority is expected to concentrate its activity on clearing Washington's alleys of the squalor that now characterizes them, while the job of building low-cost houses to replace the alley dwellings probably will be left to the PWA housing division and perhaps to the District Rehabilitation Corporation, if the latter is able to obtain FERA funds. This project is now being held in obeyance.

The large job of replatting squares and planning developments in the interest of public health, comfort, morals and welfare likewise comes within the purview of the alley authority.

The alley authority has $500,000 in PWA funds to use as a revolving fund, but it is authorized to borrow more money from the RFC or other Governmental agencies and doubtless will, as local experts believe the present fund is entirely inadequate.

The PWA housing division has $4,300,000 available for a white and a colored low-cost housing development in Washington. PWA officials said yesterday that Public Works Administrator Ickes has no intention of turning over this fund to the alley authority, but that Col. Hackett's office will gladly cooperate in any program for better coordination.

Ihlder Mentioned for Post.

John Ihlder, local housing expert, has been prominently mentioned for the post of executive officer of the authority. Ihlder drafted the bill that finally passed Congress and assisted the National Capital Park and Planning Commission for four years in its low-cost housing program. Last year he was secretary of the Washington Housing Committee which, with the aid of Mrs. Franklan D. Roosevelt, put through the bill.

The alley authority is empowered to do the following under its organic act:

1. Purchase or acquire by condemnation or gift any land, buildings or structures situated in or adjacent to an inhabited alley in the District.

2. Replat any land acquired under the act, repave streets or alleys, construct sewers or water mains, install street lights and move or alter buildings.

3. Lease, rent, maintain, equip, manage, exchange, sell or convey any lands or buildings acquired.

4. Make loans to limited dividend corporations whose dividends do not exceed 6 per cent or to home owners to enable them to acquire and develop sites on property acquired under the act.

Price Limitation Set.

The authority is barred from buying any property at a price in excess of 30 per cent of the assessed valuation for any square. This limitation, inserted at the insistance of Representative Palmisano (Democrat), of Maryland, may slow the authority's work in view of the experience of the PWA housing division in Washington.

After almost a year's negotiations, the PWA housing division abandoned a proposed project in the vicinity of Howard University because option prices were found to be running far in excess of the assessed valuations.

All plans for replatting or condemnation of property under the act must be approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the District Commissioners.

The Capper-Norton act states that "On and after July 1, 1944, it shall be unlawful to use or occupy any alley dwelling or structure as a dwelling in the District of Columbia."

No further alley dwellings may be built from the passage of the act, and no such structure may be moved, altered or converted for use as an alley dwelling.

Any person violating either of these provisions is subject to a $500 fine or imprisonment up to six months or both.

The alley authority is required to make an annual report to the President, who in turn will transmit it to Congress. A complete report is required when the project is completed.

Conley Votes Asked by Nice To Beat Ritchie

G. O. P. Candidate Makes Appeal; Governor and Coad 'Bury Hatchet.'

Baltimore, Oct. 9 (Spl.).—A direct appeal on the part of Harry W. Nice, Republican gubernatorial candidate, for the votes of Democrats who supported Dr. Charles H. Conley, Frederick, unsuccessful primary opponent of Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, and a declaration by Gov. Ritchie that he and one of his one-time arch political foes, State Senator J. Allan Coad, had "buried the hatchet," were late developments in the Maryland political situation today.

Gov. Ritchie's supporters announced here that Senator Coad, fiery party leader of Southern Maryland, will cooperate in the battle to elect the full party ticket in the election next month. Gov. Ritchie declared that he plans to as': Senator Coad to take the stump for the Democrats during the next four weeks in a move to swing counties known to be anti-Ritchie into the Governor's column.

Coad Urges Ritchie Support.

This action will be taken, it was indicated, as a result of Senator Coad's address at a State-wide Democratic rally at Leonardtown in which Coad urged that all members of the party back the Ritchie ticket, even though they had opposed him in the primary. Senator Coad will be asked to speak in several counties of Southern and Western Maryland.

Speaking at Leonardtown last night, Senator Coad advised all Democrats to support the State ticket "from top to bottom." He said Gov. Ritchie has successfully reduced the cost of government in Maryland to the lowest point since the Civil War.

It is expected Senator Coad will be instrumental in leading back into the Ritchie fold many Democrats who voted for Dr. Conley in the primary.

Mr. Nice's bid for Conley-Democratic votes was made at a Republican dinner last night, when he declared that Democrats who support him in the general election cannot be charged with party disloyalty, but "should be commended for their efforts to uphold a sound political principle of loyalty to the State as against blind partisanship."

Calls for "Honest Revolt."

"Support by Democratic voters of Republican candidates in this election," he said, "does not constitute an abandonment of party principles, but represents an honest revolt against the evils brought about by long continuance in office, arrogance of authority and indifference to the rights of citizens. This was strikingly illustrated by the more than 100,000 Democrats who protested against the present Democratic machine and sought relief through the leadership of Dr. Charles H. Conley. * * *

"Theirs was a vote for the principle of law observance, respect for the Constitution against political arrogance, for relief from crushing taxation through the elimination of destructive waste and extravagance—a principle which can only prevail through their emphasizing their protest in the November elections.

The party dinner at which he launched his drive against the election of Gov. Ritchie for a fifth term in office was given under the auspices of the Hamilton Club of Maryland and the Young Republican Club. Presiding was William P. Lawson, named Republican State chairman under Nice's sponsorship to succeed Galen L. Tait, who held the post for 20 years.

Winchester Firemen Urge City to Eliminate Hazards

Ancient Wooden Structures in Downtown Section Cited in Petition Resulting From Recent Disastrous Blaze.

Winchester, Va., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—The Charley Rouss Fire Co. today presented to Common Council a petition in which seven suggestions were made for the elimination of alleged fire-traps which have been a source of concern to local firemen since a disastrous blaze in the business section this summer.

Action by the firemen was in line with similar action recently taken by the South End Hose Co. and the Friendship Fire Co.

The petition suggested that certain regulations be observed in new construction, that no inflammable materials for roofs be used, that a law be enacted compelling persons to purge their property of all fire hazards, and that the city be zoned for inspection by representatives of the four companies.

One of the chief fire hazards, firemen assert, is to be found in some ancient wooden structures sandwiched through the business section of the city which probably would come down if the suggestions of the Rouss members are adopted.

Unidentified Man Found in Daze

Can't Talk or Write; Had $2.80 in Cash.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Anne Arundel County police officials are seeking to establish identity of a man found wandering early today at Harness Creek, South River, 4 miles from Annapolis.

The man, apparently 55, could neither talk nor write, although he scribbled on a piece of paper what appeared to be the initials "M. A." or "G. A." Otherwise Sheriff R. Glenn Prout and his deputies have nothing tending to identification, as $2.80 in loose change was all that was found in his clothing.

The man is 6 feet tall and clothed in a blue suit with black belt, tan woolen shirt, a pair of Army shoes and a black felt hat.

Maryland Girl Shoots Herself

Daughter of Farmer Had Been Despondent.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Miss Margaret Elizabeth Hamilton, 22, daughter of Edward Y. Hamilton, farmer, of Mount Pleasant district, committed suicide late yesterday by shooting herself over the heart with a shotgun. She was found by her brother, Austin W. Hamilton.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton left home early in the afternoon for the Frederick Fair Ground, their daughter having declined to go. Later she went to a shed between the house and barn, climbed into a large iron barrel, placed the muzzle of the gun over her heart and discharged the weapon.

While no cause could be assigned for the act, she had recently been despondent. Magistrate Sherman P. Bowers, acting coroner, gave a verdict of suicide.

Heavy Losses For G.O.P. Seen By Democrats

New Deal High Command Gives Foes Only 125 Seats in Congress.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

The Democratic high command is planning to toss a bombshell into the Congressional campaign in the form of a prediction that the next Congress will have the smallest percentage of Republicans since pre-Civil War days.

Chairman Farley probably will make the forecast on or about November 1, on the basis of a survey of prospects by the Democratic National Committee's headquarters.

The survey indicates at present, Democratic chieftains say, that the G. O. P. will have only about 25 Senate seats and fewer than 100 House posts in the Seventy-fourth Congress provided there are no upsets in trends before the elections on November 6. These figures are disputed by Republican spokesmen. Declining to acknowledge losses in either branch, they predict gains in both.

Meantime, an army of high Government officials has started a final intense verbal barrage in the Democratic drive for return of a big "New Deal" Congress in November's elections.

Virtually every region of the country where troublesome contests are expected will be visited by Administration speakers. Some of the addresses will be non-political in character. All naturally, will be pointed in favor of the New Deal.

In the present Congress, Republicans fill 35 Senate and 114 House seats; Democrats have 60 Senate and 309 House places, Farmer-Laborites hold one Senate and five House seats. There are seven vacancies in the House.

Of the 35 Republican seats in the Senate, 16 are at issue in November. If the Democratic survey should prove accurate, it would mean that the G. O. P. would lose ten of the sixteen and about 15 house posts.

Before the campaign started, Democratic leaders conceded that they might lose about 40 House seats to the Republicans, but insisted they would retain all their strength in the Senate.

That some House seats will switch back into the Republican column has been conceded by Farley, but he has said these losses will be offset by gains in Eastern States.

Extradition of Hauptmann Is Demanded by New Jersey

Gov. Moore at 4:34 p. m. Attorney General David T. Wilentz hurried with them toward Lehman's Park avenue residence.

After receiving the papers tonight, Lehman planned to return to Albany and determine early tomorrow if a hearing would be held.

James M. Fawcett, defense counsel, would not comment on the extradition request. But previously, he had said he would fight any such attempt.

District Attorney Samuel Foley of the Bronx met Gov. Lehman at the luncheon and discussed the extradition.

On leaving, he reiterated his preparedness to proceed Thursday in trying Hauptmann on the indictment charging extortion of the $50,000 fruitless ransom.

Confers With Gov. Moore.

Foley went at once to Trenton, conferred with Gov. Moore and Wilentz and was present when the extradition papers were signed.

At the meeting of Foley with New Jersey officials, the district attorney apparently agreed to trying the New Jersey charges first. He has maintained he would readily relinquish his claim to the more serious charge of murder and kidnaping.

In disclosing the surprise witness, Gov. Moore said: "If his story can be believed, it will sew up the case against Hauptmann."

This witness is the first to place Hauptmann at the scene of the crime. His identity, Moore said, may be made public tomorrow.

Attorney General Wilentz said Moore's comment was the first he had of the new witness.

$15,000 For Trial Expenses.

Gov. Moore also announced $15,000 was appropriated today to bear the first expense of the murder trial at Flemington—the cost of which will be paid by the State to take the burden from the rural county of Hunterdon.

As the Jersey officials decided to ask for immediate extradition, permission was granted Defense Attorney Fawcett to examine the 15 ransom notes—all identified by experts as the handwriting of Hauptmann.

Fawcett went to Trenton with an expert retained by the defense, Aaron Lewis.

He conferred with Schwarzkopf and Wilentz.

Afterward, the attorney general announced:

"Mr. Fawcett can have anything he wants with reference to those notes, originals, photographs and all. If I had any feeling the notes weren't on the level, I wouldn't want the case."

Voice Clews Aids Case.

The mass of circumstantial evidence and identifications linking the stolid alien to the crime was strengthened by the disclosure of Col. Schwarzkopf last night that Lindbergh had identified Hauptmann's voice as the one heard that night in St. Raymond's Cemetery in the Bronx when "Jafsie"—Dr. John F. Condon, aged welfare worker and intermediary—paid over the $50,000 ransom.

District Attorney Foley today amplified the circumstances of this identification.

That night, as "Jafsie" walked along the hedgerow bordering the cemetery, the flier awaited in his automobile nearby.

The kidnaper knew Lindbergh and "Jafsie" would come alone.

"Jafsie" proceeded down the dark road. He peered over the hedge, saw no one.

Then, in loud, he said:

"I guess there is no one here. I'd better go back."

"Hey, Doctor" in Dark.

In the stillness of the night, there came a reply from behind a tombstone.

"Hey, doctor."

This was the ransom recipient.

While Lindbergh, wearing dark glasses, a cap pulled down over his eyes, sat among a group of detectives in Foley's office a week ago, unbeknown to the prisoner, Hauptmann was asked innumerable questions by the district attorney.

Frequently, Foley would have Hauptmann say "Hey, doctor."

Lindbergh studied the voice for ten minutes. He noted the Germanic quality. He heard it at various pitches, from divers angles, at different distances.

Then he came to the conclusion the voice was the same as that of the ransom recipient.

This was deemed doubly important in view of the past announcement that "Jafsie" had not positively identified Hauptmann as the man to whom the ransom was paid.

State to Probe Escapes Today

Special Grand Jury Will Be Called by Judge at Richmond.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 9 (AP).—Circumstances under which Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, condemned gangster murderers, shot their way out of the Richmond Jail will be subjected to official scrutiny here beginning tomorrow.

Judge Don P. Halsey, of Lynchburg, selected by Gov. Peery to call and supervise the deliberations of a special grand jury, is expected in the morning and at 11 o'clock will start selection of the jurors.

Meanwhile, Commonwealth Attorney T. Gray Haddon, has announced that his preparations for an exhaustive investigation have been completed, with a witness list prepared and other evidence assembled for presentation to the grand jury.

The search for the missing men is being continued along with plans for fixing responsibility for their escape. Richmond police are being sent out to investigate new reports that the fugitives have been seen, while at the same time officers throughout Virginia and neighboring States continue to receive reports of holdups or other crimes in which the participants "looked like Mais and Legenza."

No clew, however, has definitely established their whereabouts at any time since they made their escape here on Saturday morning, September 29.

Platform Spells Economy

Eight Planks in Unique Declaration of Carroll County Republicans Also Add Up to Word Progress; Westminster Rally Set.

Westminster, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—The Republican candidates of Carroll County have adopted a unique platform for the coming campaign—the first letters of each sentence spelling "economy" and the last letters "progress."

The eight-plank platform, which includes a definite stand for no further surrender of personal liberties and a minimum of Governmental regulation, was announced as follows:

"Efficiency in administration and management, and an honest and complete accounting of our stewardship.

"Courageous enforcement of law, preservation of citizens' rights, and the maintenance of order.

"Only such taxation as is absolutely necessary, the county government's income to determine its outgo.

"No further surrender of personal liberties, property rights and Constitutional guarantees in the hands of the demagogue.

"Obliging and courteous service by every administrative officer.

"Minimum of governmental regulation and interferance with the affairs of the people, thereby dispelling corruption and waste.

"Youth and old age appropriately recognized and assisted—for the one, an adequate system of education and good schools; "for the other, security and life's necessities."

It was announced that on October 30 Republican State candidates will tour Carroll County preceding a mass meeting to be held in the local armory.

Redecorated Club Chanticleer Will Open as Cocktail Lounge

Sidney of the Mayflower Gets Mellow Effect in His Music by More Violins; Thelma Goodwyn Sings in New Show at Shoreham.

By Kay Ware.

Washington night life has gained enough momentum to be close to the winter's whirl.

Old Club Chanticleer flaps its wings next Saturday, and will be offered to the public in the form of a cocktail lounge. It's directly under Club Michel. The interior has been done over. Now you'll sink into plush rugs, and sip to the tones of an organ. Senor Don Gomez will officiate at the organ console.

If, after the cocktail, you have a sharpened appetite, Club Michel, only a step up, provides an excellent dinner. A new chef, Tony Shahady, has charge of the kitchen crew.

And if, after the excellent dinner, you've a mind for a revue, there's one right there. Bobby Gillette, with banjo and dancing partner, Shirley Richards, head the bill. Others include Roberta Janey, dancer of the "Sophisticated Lady," a splendid singer and an accordionist with the orchestra.

Sidney of the Mayflower has added a violin here and there because he believes the strings blend well with the atmosphere of the Lounge. He's right; the music is soft and mellow, a perfect background for whispered somethings.

Sid Cowen has added more foreign songs to his repertoire. They include numbers borrowed from Russia, Spain and Italy. The diplomats from these countries often happen around. It is to hear Sid sing?

New show introduced at the Shoreham. Thelma Goodwyn entertains with a light soprano voice. Bobby Sanford's girls continue to make up the chorus. You've heard Thelma over the Columbia network.

The dance team, Garron and Bennett, has just finished a run in Chicago. They do their interpretation of Rachmaninoff's G. minor prelude.

The three blonde tap dancers continue to ruffle their hair and flutter their feet. Donald Burr, of the "Garrick Gaities" sings several numbers with the chorus.

The two best numbers of the opening show are repeated this week. They are: the Gay Nineties song and dance, and the Duval sisters in a modernistic dance, with gilt painted eye-lids and lips.

Shows presented at 9:15, 11:30 and 1 a. m.

Came a big basket of red roses to Pete Macias last Friday night. Card attached says, "Hi-de-ho at Heigh-Ho."

That sums it up. Pete rushed back and forth gathering telegrams, handshakes, smiles and congratulations. One of the telegrams arrived in the middle of the floor show, and it took Marty Rubin to read it. It was from a Miss Otis, who regretted she couldn't come over for luncheon, and by the time the reason for her absence was explained everybody felt like having hysterics.

People arrived in great bunches, and ever-resourceful Ramon managed to put up several extra tables to accommodate them. Important socialites and other celebrities were there. Pete knew and greeted them all.

The Great Maurice, the magician, pulled rings off of strings and fluttered over a deck of cards, interpreted dreams, and quoted aphorisms. Enters and Borgia danced and continued to dance. They managed to look as if they enjoyed it, too. Particularly good was their number, "Flirtation." Pete was right, they are different.

Side lights: Orchestra rehearsing for radio broadcast . . . Pete saying, "That's the bus-boy's song, 'I Only Have Ice for You.'" . . . Champagne cocktails to everybody—on the house. Shoulder corsages of pink, cream, and red roses for all the ladies . . . Carnations on lapels of dinner jackets . . . Ramon, greeting and escorting couples to tables in secluded corners . . . Ramon is the only one who answers the phone . . . Wood paneled walls, soft orange lights . . . flattering to lovely feminine eyes . . .

When you hop into a taxi and greet the driver with "Heigh-Ho!", don't giggle.

Young Sister Hubbard
Went to the cupboard
To get out her Sunday night dress.
But when she got there
The cupboard was bare
Because she lent her black velvet to her kid sister, her rose satin to her brother's wife, her mother was wearing her green taffeta, which proves that charity shouldn't begin at home.

For atmosphere of the Latin Americas, the Madrillon is the place. The dance team there, Nina and Fidel, show you how a flamenca is danced by Moorish gypsies. The Portuguese fada is another number, as well as a Spanish tango.

If you don't think castanets are hard to handle, ask a musician. These dancers are experts with the black clickers.

Foot note—Nina is a real Cinderella, and wears a tiny slipper of 2-B size.

Redhead Susan Hall is improving with age and practice. Her acrobatic tap dances are better than could be expected from an amateur.

Don't forget Saturday afternoon cocktail hour. Arsenio Ralon's concert group furnishes music.

If pale green, silver, black tile and bamboo trees are included in your mood, you'll find them all at the Willard's Bamboo Room. If dry Martinis appeal to your palate, try the Willard's. They serve them in separate little jiggers, nested in cracked ice, and pour them at the table. The olives don't get soft and squashy.

The Secretary of the Egyptian Legation, Andre Cattaui, and Dr. Bidancourt have been seen there.

Show at Maryland Club Gardens includes Dolores sisters, dance team; Charles Mayer, an N. B. C. crooner, and an accordion soloist.

Watch for cabaret opening on Halloween.

Corbitt and Triano have been held over at the Lotus another week. Their dances are original. Helen Kennedy offers a fan dance. They're almost as popular as the rhumba these days.

A young lady with a deep blue voice is Madeline Courtney. Another dance team—Frances and Renard fly through the air with the greatest of ease in an adagio number.

A little singer with a pretty profile has become a member of Bill Strickland's Capitolians. Name's Judy Ellington.

Three dine and dance places are Sears Winter Garden, singing waiters and good food; the Rendezvous, convenient to the Northeast section, Sunday dancing, and the Showboat, merriment and good music.

By the time Minnie's trial is over, she ought to be ready for a parole. The Cotton Club still offers its services as a courtroom, and there Minnie the Moocher is tried and sentenced every night. Another separate show—"Louisiana Nights."

Drug store counters and glimpses of patrons—The sallow-faced adolescent who lovingly dawdles through a banana split . . . The tired woman who eyes a chocolate pie, sighs and orders a coca cola . . . The high school dates who flutter eyelids over walnut-caramel sundaes . . . The business man who hurries in just long enough to gulp a bicarbonate of soda . . . The athletes brown and hatless, sipping contentedly on an orangeade . . . The soda jerkers who scream orders and swear under their breath . . . "We will gladly make any sandwich you may suggest" invites a sign . . . Gallons of chocolate syrup . . . of tomato juice . . . Sly flirtation in the mirror above the counter . . . small clouds of powder from feminine puffs . . . Mothers and clamoring children, "Two strawberry cones, please."

Slop of a wet cloth. "Y' order taken?"

Watch for news of Loewenkeller's opening. It promises to hop as far as Mexico. Hum-m-m. Will it be Club Habana?

"Revusical" from Broadway is offered at La Paree this week. Ann Mason heads the bill. Luis and Pegi are still dancing there; Roco Plaza, the master of ceremonies, continues to be funny, Marie Fowler and Ray Beck sing with the orchestra.

Shows at 1 p. m., 7:45, and midnight.

Did you know that Bobby Sanford's Revue at the Shoreham is a Meyer Davis unit, and has recently been chugging up and down the Hudson in a show boat?

Enters and Borgia, dancing at Heigh-Ho have been married only two weeks. Honeymooners on vacation?

Brain Trust Invents Nothing, Briton Tells College Students

Ex-Parliament Member Speaker at Western Maryland.

Westminister, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.). Philip W. Wilson, of England, former member of the British Parliament, speaking yesterday to the student body of Western Maryland College on the subject, "The World We Want," declared that "with due respect to the Brain Trust, it has not invented anything yet."

Amplifying his remark, Mr. Wilson said that our present banking and labor policies had been established in Europe for some time.

Referring throughout his address to the New Deal, the speaker declared that a distinction must be made between control of industry and the freedom of one's own mind, and questioned whether new inventions could be obtained without maintaining private enterprise.

Mr. Wilson told the students that the New Deal was more world-wide in scope than they realized, and stressed the fact that the purpose of education was not only to earn a living but should also be the means of learning to enjoy life.

Concluding his address, Mr. Wilson questioned whether the people are talking themselves into war or out of it, and amplified his statement with the assertion that a present difference in diplomacy has been brought about through radio broadcasts.

Virginia Fights Rail Rate Rise

New Expenses Necessitate Increase, Declares Head of Line.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 9 (AP).—While Gov. Peery was announcing today that he had authorized the State Corporation Commission to proceed with its fight against a general freight rate increase, Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway Co., told its stockholders here that a rate increase is "absolutely necessary."

Mr. Harrison said higher freight rates were needed "to offset the additional expenses caused by the increase in cost of materials and equipment."

Explaining a report of the railway's operations from January 1, 1934, to August 31, 1934, as compared with the same period of 1933, which showed a decrease in operating income of $1,725,430, Mr. Harrison said the three principal factors causing the decrease were higher wages, increased cost of nearly every item of material or equipment and the new pensions system which will add further to the railroad's expenses.

"The principle of the NRA codes is that prices to the public should be increased so that higher wages can be paid and more profits will come to the company," he said.

Long Candidate Leads In Supreme Court Vote

Marksville, La., Oct. 9 (AP).—First returns from today's Supreme Court election in the Third District gave Lieut. Gov. John B. Fournet, candidate of Senator Long, a lead over District Judge Thomas F. Porter, anti-Long candidate, for the bench.

Fourteen precincts out of 25 in Avoyelles Parish gave Fournet 736 votes and Porter 324.

Colorful Fete Will Mark Anniversary at Yorktown

Fechner Will Open Road Leading to Camp Site on October 19.

Yorktown, Va., Oct. 9. (AP).—A two-day celebration October 18 and 19 will mark the 153d anniversary of the surrender at Yorktown. The celebration will feature the restoration and development work done here by the National Park Service.

The first event of the celebration will be the opening of the sites of the American encampments, on the afternoon of October 18.

Robert Fechner, director of emergency conservation work, under whose direction members of four Conservation Corps camps cleared the area and constructed the paths and trails, will be in charge of the ceremonies. He will cut a ribbon officially opening the reconstructed Colonial road leading to the old York-Hampton highway through the encampment area and on toward Yorktown by way of the dam across Wormleys Pond.

After opening the road, the party will move northward, stopping first at the site of the encampment of the Virginia Militia, commanded during the siege of Yorktown by Thomas Nelson, jr., where a marker will be unveiled by Ashton Dovell, member of the House of Delegates from Williamsburg. Immediately after, a similar marker will be unveiled on the site of the encampment of the American Light Infantry, at whose head was the Marquis de Lafayette, by Mrs. George Durbin Chenowith, regent of Compte de Grasse Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

From this point the party will continue along the road toward the Moore house. Along this road the American troops moved when going to and from the trenches around Yorktown. Washington gave orders that detachments moving toward the trenches cease beating their drums after reaching the dam across Wormleys Creek in order that their appearance before the British fortifications might not be made apparent any sooner than necessary.

The dam, which forms a large pond at the upper end of the west branch of Wormleys Creek, furnished power for the grist mill built and operated in colonial times. The area, including the pond, was purchased by the Navy Department during the World War as a part of the naval fuel oil station and in 1933 that portion west of the dam was transferred to the Park Service for inclusion in the Colonial National Monument.

The Farm Census.

Having defeated the Administration's more extensive plans for an intermediate census, the Republicans appear to be going out of their way to denounce the agricultural enumeration scheduled for this winter. It is true, of course, that this census will create 25,000 temporary jobs, which will doubtless be awarded to faithful Democrats. But that alone is not sufficient to condemn it as an undertaking.

A distinction must be drawn between jobs of this kind and positions in the established agencies of Government. It would be expensive and cumbersome to select census enumerators—some of whom will be employed only 30 days—through competitive examinations. Partisan defenders of the merit system have a far better issue in the use of the recovery agencies for the distribution of spoils.

And Representative Snell's contention that the regular decennial census affords the Government all the information necessary is far from convincing. Vast changes have come over farming districts in the last four years. Population has shifted farmward in some sections and cityward in others. The drought seems to have rendered obsolete much of the data concerning farms of the Great Plains. The extensive information sought through this special questionnaire would undoubtedly be useful.

Many thoughtful observers question the wisdom of the entire agricultural adjustment program. But since that policy is in effect nothing is to be gained by denying the AAA the information it considers necessary to carry out its program intelligently. When party leaders take up an issue of this kind they lay themselves open to countercharges of petty obstruction.

Propaganda Machinery.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the New Jersey Newspaper Institute at Rutgers, Elisha Hanson, Washington representative of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, charged that the Administration's "information bureaus" constitute a threat to the freedom of the press.

Governmental information services frequently hand out what must be called propaganda for the New Deal. But there is no way of compelling the newspapers to print this material, if they do not believe it to be newsworthy. Moreover, efforts to limit the information coming from departments by sealing the mouths of officials have not been noticeably successful and are not likely to be. Perhaps Mr. Hanson would have been better advised if he had called the system, not so much a threat to a free press, as a challenge to journalism that may do it more good than harm.

Present-day journalism has often had to answer the charge of laziness, not always substantiated, because of an alleged willingness to accept too uncritically what is prepared for it by interested parties. This tendency, certainly, would operate against a really free press, if it did not tend to create a healthy skepticism in both the editorial and the reportorial mind.

Much valuable information is available through the Government's press releases. But even when they are filled with propaganda, the people who depend upon the newspapers for objective information need not be unduly alarmed. It is not alone the duty but the great satisfaction of newspapermen to "get behind" the official release. There is plenty of evidence that they do this continually. The official release, from what Mr. Hanson calls the "propaganda machinery" of the Administration, may serve as a spur to constructive reporting far more than a gag to the freedom of the press.

Reply To A Critic.

A correspondent of The Post, in a letter published October 6, takes issue with an editorial in which we express the opinion that the Director of the Budget should hold independent views in regard to budgetary policies and be able to defend them openly and fearlessly. Our critic alleges that the responsibility for budgetary policies rests solely with the President as Chief Executive. The Budget Director, being merely an agent of the President, should be regarded as occupying a routine position in no way comparable in importance with that of the Secretary of the Treasury.

From a strictly legal point of view, the President is of course responsible for the budgetary plan submitted to Congress. However, it might be said with equal truth that he is responsible for the policies of the members of his Executive Cabinet, since they are his personal appointees, removable at will. If a President chooses—as some have—to make their Cabinet officers mere rubber stamps, they are not exceeding their powers, but they are undoubtedly pursuing a course of conduct that prevents them from securing the services of efficient and fearless men.

The importance generally assigned to the office of Director of the Budget is due to a growing realization that the President needs a man of outstanding qualities to offer advice and guidance on budgetary matters. Power to decide upon the budgetary plan rests, it is true, with the President. In this case as in many other matters, however, an overburdened Chief Executive needs the expert aid of highly trained and politically independent subordinates as a guide to the development of plans and policies.

The Test For Mussolini.

There are moments, seemingly increasingly frequent of late years, when elemental forces break through the thin crust of civilization in a way which causes the most casual to stop, and look and listen. Such an event is the assassination of the King of Yugoslavia and the Foreign Minister of France at Marseille.

Of the consequences of this terrible crime none can at the moment speak with certainty. The very involvement of European politics which was bringing Alexander to Paris assures repercussions from his tragic death which will send tremors far beyond the frontiers of the countries immediately affected.

Indeed, the outstanding personalities of the two victims, and their individual importance to European stability, make this political murder as pregnant of disaster as was that of Sarajevo. For Alexander, by his own force of character, had been welding into unity the discordant national elements in Yugoslavia. And Barthou, more successfully than any French statesman since Briand, had been laboring to consolidate and strengthen the crumbling defenses of peace in Europe.

It does not follow, however, that the consequences of these assassinations will be similar to those of the Archduke Ferdinand and his wife in 1914. There is significance in the very fact that we can see the possibilities now more clearly than was then the case. And in 1914 prosperous, disciplined, self-confident nations were poised to spring at each other's throats.

Today, not all the marching and maneuvering and posturing of dictators can hide the disintegration threatening the stability of most European states. What has just been happening in Spain is more likely to sweep over Europe than what happened 20 years ago. Perhaps we do not adequately realize how much of the bombast uttered by dictators is designed to cover and divert domestic discontent.

Now, however, one outstanding dictator confronts a situation which can not be met by repeating the current technique. On Mussolini, more than on any other single individual, is resting the immediate destiny of Europe. He has doubtless often wished that this should be the case. He has often intimated that it is the case. Today it is the case. The position of Italy with relation to both France and Yugoslavia make it certain that on Mussolini's attitude will largely hinge the immediate future of Europe. Here is the test of the real man. Here is the solution of the enigma behind the defiant, outstretched arm; the blazoned medals; and the provocative speech.

Some disorder in Yugoslavia is all but certain. The forces which Alexander's stern dictatorship controlled there will now rise boiling to the surface. Confusion and adaptation of foreign policy is to be expected in France. It would be a miracle if there were no tremors and troubles throughout disorganized central Europe and the Balkans. Whether or not such reactions quickly quiet down, or cumulatively increase and merge into disasters, will largely be determined by the self-control of one man.

Mussolini has demanded and secured, for his country and for himself, a decisive place in world destiny. The test of his magnitude in that place has come.

Back To Preaching.

Exhibiting every token of a fixed sincerity, Lloyd George, at the London City Temple, declares that he has no longer any faith in the ability of politicians to protect mankind against war. He says that only the clergy can protect it. Coming so close to the crime of Marseilles, this utterance possesses significance for the student of international affairs. Coming in the autumn of Lloyd George's life, it possesses an almost equal significance for the student of psychology.

Lloyd George was a clever politician when English Tories derided him as "a bally little Welsh attorney." As a great politician, he compelled those Tories to accept far-reaching reforms. And, still as a politician, in his role of postwar premier, he may be said to have had some responsibility for bringing the world to the pass wherefrom, he finally declares, the politicians are unable to extricate it.

But it should be remembered that L. G.'s entry into politics was somewhat accidental. By force of inheritance, he should have been in the church. When a boy, he wanted to be a preacher; when grown, he found himself a politician. Now, at the last phase, the Celtic heart triumphs over the weary, whitened head. "There is nothing that will save the world," he says, "but what was once called 'the foolishness of preaching.'"

Vacillating Headgear.

The Secretary of Labor has a new hat, presented to her without prejudice by the vice presidents of the cap and millinery departments of the United Hatters Union. The hat is not a tricorn, such as Miss Perkins has worn consistently since she became a member of the President's Cabinet. It is one of those indeterminate, mugwumpish affairs turned up on one side and down on the other.

The question is—will the Secretary of Labor make the break and go in for a new deal in hats? Her tricorn is done in the traditional manner, it is conservative, its Napoleonic outline smacks of leadership. This new lop-sided hat leaves a conjecture in one's mind as to its purpose. Moreover, it suggests vacillation—for instance, uncertainty as to the proper interpretation of section 7(a).

The Secretary of Labor has not yet worn her new millinery, though she has announced her intention of so doing. And the announcement of an intention, with Miss Perkins, is generally not far from its consummation.

On the other hand, there is a lot to be said for getting a formula in headgear and sticking to it, regardless of pressure from organized labor or organized business. Consider Queen Mary, for instance. Surely an American Cabinet minister, as much as the British queen, should soar above the perennial battle ground of hats.

Mr. Richberg At Chicago.

Calm judgment and a sincere desire to help private industry regain its equilibrium were evident in almost every paragraph of Donald R. Richberg's address in Chicago. With "plain speaking and intellectual humility," the director of the Industrial Emergency Committee analyzed the special task confronting the NRA and the Administration's general recovery program. His broad conception of the basic issues and his common-sense policy of approaching unsolved industrial problems carry a definite note of reassurance.

"The only tolerable way out of this depression," said Mr. Richberg, "is being found in the steady increase of employment in profitable private business." Apparently the new policy of the NRA is to be evolved with this objective in view. As we move further out of the depression, it is asserted, temporary aids to business will be discontinued and experimental restrictions will be modified.

Hasty organization of industry, Mr. Richberg admits, afforded machinery for control of production and prices that might easily be misused. Codes of this sort are to be gradually overhauled without application of any rigid formulas or principles. Each industry will be considered a separate problem. Price fixing and curtailment of output may be retained in some industries, especially those exploiting natural resources. But a clear line will be drawn between "the right of business men to associate freely for the preservation of fair competition and the illegality of associations for the purpose of preventing or restricting fair competition."

Mr. Richberg's view of the labor problem is equally well balanced. The urgent need for expanding employment and purchasing power is a cardinal point in the reorganized NRA program. But the process of increasing wages to create purchasing power, he says, may be accelerated too rapidly. To the demand of the American Federation of Labor for a 30-hour week, without reduction of weekly earnings, he makes this significant reply:

> Unless there is a careful restraint upon both increasing labor costs and increasing prices a delicate balance will be upset. Too high prices will stifle purchasing power; too high wages will either stifle production or so hasten the substitution of machine power for man power that new areas of unemployment will be created.

On the other hand, he offers judicious advice to employers who resist all dealings with organized labor. "So long as labor organizations are compelled to fight for their very right of existence," he said, "they will be led by fighting men, who will be just as hard-boiled and ruthless in waging industrial warfare as those who oppose them. The only way to get rid of the cruelties and losses of industrial conflicts is to remove their causes."

In treating the agricultural problem and the unbalanced budget, Mr. Richberg's remarks were less convincing. Many of the criticisms of the Government's extravagant spending policy are not "the product either of gross ignorance or the cheapest form of political demagogism," as Mr. Richberg asserts. He himself admits—he could not do otherwise—that some of these extraordinary outlays have been uneconomical and unwise in both design and administration. Continuation of such a loose spending policy inevitably tends to undermine the confidence which Mr. Richberg is working, in his own field, to sustain.

A Barrier To Trade.

In an address before the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations, James P. Warburg said that "this present Administration by reducing the foreign exchange value of our currency 40 per cent has arbitrarily increased our tariff by 66 2-3 per cent, except as against nations whose currencies have likewise depreciated." As Mr. Warburg subsequently stated, however, currency depreciation is "invariably offset by retaliatory action on the part of other nations." It is these continuing depreciation-induced changes, rather than depreciation itself, that constitute the most serious obstacle to world trade recovery at the present time.

In Mr. Warburg's opinion, international agreements to reduce tariffs, import quotas and other restrictions can be made effective only if they are accompanied by international agreements to stabilize currencies. Unfortunately, the chaotic state of world currencies shows no signs of abatement at present. On the contrary, there is evidence of increased anxiety regarding the future of the gold bloc currencies. The recent rapid decline of the pound has put renewed pressure upon the trade of countries still on the gold standard. The collapse of Germany's financial machinery for foreign trade has added to existing difficulties and Europe fears that the dollar may be further devalued.

Many, although not all, of these causes of anxiety would be removed if there were any indication of positive willingness on the part of Great Britain and the United States to effect a final stabilization of the dollar and the pound at some fixed ratio. Directly or indirectly, the currencies of a large majority of the nations depend upon the action of these two countries. If the exchange value of the dollar and pound were established finally and definitely, a long step would have been taken toward eventual escape from the vicious circle of depreciation, retaliatory manuevers and all the other protective obstacles that block the channels of international commerce.

The Letter Of The Law.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A Post letter-writer, in calling attention to the statement of Thomas Jefferson in his old age that "the real friends of the Constitution in its Federal form . . . should be attentive, by amendments, to keep pace" with changing conditions, suggests a line of thought which I think is of first importance for unprejudiced consideration at the present time.

It may be that Jefferson was unduly apprehensive regarding the dangers of National centralization. But anyone who gives it serious consideration must agree with the Jeffersonian doctrine that a documentary Constitution, in order to live, must be kept free from a weedy preponderance of inferential, implied interpretations. As an uncompromising stickler for the strict letter of the law, the influence of Jefferson was needed in the tender stage of our governmental growth.

In fact, I think it is a great pity that there were not enough troublesome Jeffersons in its membership to effectively stick up for the letter of the written Constitution when Congress unwrote its legislative powers as a sacrifice to the executive branch of the Government to meet a peace-time emergency.

Technical mistakes, maladministration, and serious emergencies are bound to happen in any human form of government. But our history up to now has shown that the safest form is under a written Constitution with definite demarcations of legislative, executive, and judicial power, and, in the words of Washington's Farewell Address, "containing within itself a provision for its own amendments."

Impressionist Premiums.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I feel impelled to write and express my amazement at the truth and exactitude of The Post Impressionist's pertinent article anent the mystery of insurance payments and the fine ingenuity of insurance companies in saying so much and revealing so little. I want to thank The Post Impressionist for affording me a safety-valve for the pent-up irritation that is mine every time a payment is due. Truly, "misery loves company," and it does pacify one's exasperation to know there is a like understanding sufferer somewhere.

If The Post Impressionist could only see the quaint insurance letters in my files! But, of course, he must have had access to them, or he could never have quoted verbatim words and phrases, as he has done. When I tell you that my policy was taken out in Charlotte, N. C.; that I live in Washington; that my nephew-lawyer-adviser lives in Philadelphia, and that the home office is in New York, you may well imagine I could make capital copy that would be of interest, if I had as facile a pen as—some.

Again I thank The Post Impressionist for his helpful comprehension of my bewilderment. I am tempted to sign myself, not—like the insurance agent's secretary—"Yours for service," but "Yours for sympathy."

Academic Art.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Most of the criticism of the new Government buildings is based upon consideration of art. Few of the commentators seem to realize that the purpose of the buildings was to house office workers. Whether architecturally the buildings are good or bad may be a question, but there can be no doubt that they fail miserably as office buildings. The interiors are prison-like, and the occupants must work under electric lights even on the brightest days.

Anything that causes continual suffering and misery to great numbers of people can not be beautiful. To me, the buildings are a hideous pile of rock behind whose walls workers must suffer.

Our architects are chained to the past. The Greeks built to meet their own peculiar needs. Why can not we do likewise? Let offices be offices and temples be temples. No wonder American people consider academic art as bosh and bunk. That's all it is!

Making Mandates?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For several months American patriots have been engaged in a struggle with the forces of the New Deal to prevent the undermining of the very foundations of our Nation. That their protests have at last received recognition, however slight, must not be regarded as a concession to their rightful demands. The Administration's record has been one of broken promises; hence, to relax our efforts for a moment may be fatal.

A move to reassure business now might result in enough of an upturn just before election to make the National vote seem to favor the New Deal. Then, taking this as a "mandate from the people," the new Congress would proceed to make permanent much of the "emergency" legislation and grant additional powers to the President, thus tightening bureaucracy's grip on our Government.

Confidence will not return to the country until the Administration backs up its alleged good intentions with definite action. No moves would help to reassure the Nation so much as the stopping of the squandering program and the dismissal from Government service of officials whose subversive socialistic tendencies or political activities the public regards with suspicion.

Until the acts of the Administration guarantee the safety of our constitutional rights, we must remain vigilant, on guard against the influences that have been sapping the lifeblood of our economic freedom and of American liberty!

That Boomerang About Modern Youth.

Nicholas Murray Butler went into some detail the other day to revive the old song and dance about the deplorable lack of manners among the modern generation of youth. This contention has been debated altogether too long simply on its merits.

About the same time, an Eastern juvenile court judge was making some observations for publication on his contacts with youngsters. The offenses were somewhat more serious than bad manners, perhaps, but his conclusions are applicable just the same.

"Nine out of ten of our cases," he said, "result directly from parental neglect. It's not the children's fault if they develop into vagrants and criminals—if they're turned out into the streets, what chance do they have? We are not interested in seeing a child pay the penalty for his misdeeds, for that penalty, nine times out of ten, should be laid at the door of our social system or at the door of the child's parents."

It is easy to get oneself indignant about the disrespectful conduct of modern youth. One wonders, indeed, whether that isn't a popular pastime in every generation. But Dr. Butler (and the rest of us) might profitably ponder the sentiments of the juvenile courts judge.

After all, modern youth learned whatever manners it does or doesn't have under the ostensible tutelage of those who are doing the criticizing. Neither the manners nor morals of youth are self-originated.

And if the blame for ill-behavior is going to be handed back where it belongs, possibly we had just better drop the subject, Dr. Butler included.

Edmund Burke On Present Issues.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From Washington comes a news item to the effect that the Federation of Labor is to question all candidates up for election to find out if they will be favorably disposed to bills prompted by the union, and the latter promises political support from union members to those candidates who return a favorable answer.

In normal times it would seem to be poor policy and poor politics to put out such questions. These are not normal times and it seems as if most anything radical can be put across, even to setting up groups, by men in association, but not incorporated, that would make of our government the "bloc" type. If these questionnaires go out it can be suggested that the federation is not playing fair to the candidates. If they want Congressmen to play ball with them, they should take them into their unions, and give them cards and buttons to wear on their coats. Then the Congressmen could collect buttons from various other bodies, so that after a while they would have a row of decorations across their chests even as do military heroes and members of the highly elect of imperial courts.

The public, I believe, is fed up on unions—unchartered—and so irresponsible—which can bring on unnecessary strikes and which seem unable to keep their members under control; which can set up a campaign of actions North and South that leaves violence, anarchy and bloodshed, in its trail. The candidates should ignore such questions. They should adopt the policy of Edmund Burke to the electors of Bristol in 1774:

> It ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents. Their wishes ought to have great weight with him; their opinion high respect; their business unremitted attention. It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfaction, to theirs; and above all, ever, and in all cases, to prefer their interest to his own. But his unbiased opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living. These he does not derive from your pleasure; no, nor from the law and the constitution. They are a trust from Providence, for the abuse of which he is deeply answerable. Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

A representative does not always represent all the constituents of his district, or even those who gave him his majority. Too often he has been known to represent rather some favored group—some constituent, because he was a good campaign fund contributor.

The Post Impressionist

"Floors, Please!"

Postoffice, Wednesday.

WALTER MELLON writes us that the refurbished Washington Monument will contain new elevators of the latest airflow model. He says these "will be as speedy as any in America." And he says: "It's a good thing."

We are not in full accord.

We may be called conservative, we may even be called reactionary; but in our humble opinion there is entirely too much innovation going on. Things were bad enough when it was decided to demolish the old Postoffice Building. They will be as bad as they can be if Washington's few remaining slow elevators follow the way of the Constitution—by which we mean, of course, not the demoded document that James M. Beck and a few others mourn so feelingly, but the man-of-war that Oliver Wendell Holmes defended.

We are well aware that this whole subject of elevators is highly controversial. For instance, the animosities it awakened between the United States and Albion during the Bering Sea dispute survived the World War association of these Great Powers and endures today. Americans are forever jeering at the English: "Why do you call elevators 'lifts?'" And the English are forever retorting: "Because the bally things lift people up and lift 'em down—but nothing can elevate a person down, you know."

There is even an internecine elevator dispute, more bitter than a sectional wrangle or a class war. It is a temperamental difference; it divides firms and disrupts the family-life of apartment-house dwellers.

We know a civil-servant in a certain Government building (he is not a Democrat, and he needs his job, so we suppress his name) who complains: "I have spent four years in this department—one of them waiting for its elevator." And we know a girl in the same building who loves that elevator for the opportunity it gives her to do her morning make-up while moving, more or less, toward her work.

But we believe these differences are capable of reconciliation. We believe the issue is not that of Aesop, between the tortoise and the hare, but rather that between Japan and China, for which, the League of Nations holds, a formula can be still found.

Take a case in our own office. On what White House correspondents call "good authority" we are informed that the big addition to The Post Building, now noisily rising beside us, will be "equipped with fast elevators" and that the old elevator will be dismantled. Yet that vehicle, if not quite a stationary landmark, is at least an historic one, and its very tardiness has practical value.

It was there in The Post-administration of Col. John A. Cockrill, through the term of Frank Hatton, the reign of Scott Bone. Scarcely a statesman of distinction to whom it was a stranger: James G. Blaine admired its easy locomotion; Calvin Coolidge could not keep silence for a whole ride in it.

All very well to say that speed is the first requisite of news-writing. The newsmen aren't the only writers on a newspaper. There are the editorial writers. They enter that candid conveyance—say howdy to its other patrons—discuss the weather and the World Series while the operator shuts the gate and reopens it for late comers. When the cage does start, such a writer settles down to read his paper; then, if one of the stenographers is abroad, he can dictate his correspondence. Thus, when the fourth floor is attained, he is through with all distracting details and ready for the serious work of the day.

Let the reporters have their fast elevator if the stairs daunt them. Let the fashion editor share it—lest new fashions come in before she begins writing about those which were about to come in when she rang for the old cage. But it is unworthy, it is inconceivable, that an editorial writer should be hurried when entering the office to compose an opinion on so deliberate a process as National Recovery or when leaving the office to advise the State Department upon the pending treaty with Abyssinia.

As for the Washington Monument, Walter writes without due consideration. He might argue with some plausibility that its elevators should be so fast because the Monument itself is so American: none except citizens of our own dear country follow the fallacy that, because stairs are tiring to the legs and lungs, substitutes for stairs ought to be trying to the nerves. But, as we have already intimated, even if this syllogism without any "middle" is peculiar to America, it is not common to all Americans. Lots like slow elevators.

Why, then, should we not be fair-minded?

On the one hand, let's admit that a fast elevator brings you to your destination — barring accidents — somewhat sooner than a slow one, and that, the sooner the average person reaches the top of the Washington Monument, the sooner he may say: "Thank Heaven, that's over!" But let's also admit that such hurry does gouge the ganglia.

On the other hand, let's admit that a slow elevator in the Monument gives volatile people too much time to wish they'd never gone to the Monument, anyway. But let's also admit that, if you are the sort of person who can rise above his surroundings, even in an elevator, the very slowness furnishes you an opportunity to view your monumental folly philosophically.

Therefore, the Post-Impressionist hopes there'll be both a slow and a swift elevator in the Monument. And he hopes that the old Post elevator will be preserved for its historic and contemplative virtues.

And he hopes you'll agree.

Carlisle Bargeron

Coordination

ONE of the funniest things in the current political picture is the indignation of the Republicans and some of our publicists because the Administration won't admit it is buying up votes. Every time the charge is made it is blandly denied and the rage of the Republicans and publicists knows no bounds. They point out that Administration candidates everywhere brag about the money that has been poured into their State or district, that Jim Farley dwells upon it in his speeches, that the doles, benefits and what not have been catalogued by Mr. Emil Hurja of the Democratic National committee, for the candidates' use.

BARGERON

How, in view of this, they ask, can the Administration hold to its holler than thou expression and pass off these charges as too absurd for words? It makes them get blue in the face. That the Administration should be so smug as this is defeating. They are on the verge of throwing up their hands in despair.

* * * *

What is wrong with them, or rather, the reason they have been able to get little or nowhere, is that they do not understand the new type of government this Administration has set up. It is the very latest thing in organization.

It is not generally understood, but the present Administration, for the purpose of carrying on in the interest of the body weal, has been divided into two departments, two entirely new departments, it might be said. We have, as a matter of fact, always had the legislative and executive branches, but that is hardly the line-up now. The legislative branch has come largely to be simply something to elect every two years.

What we have now, instead of the legislative and executive branches, is the executive branch divided into two departments—the honest department and the political department.

* * * *

In the honest department, we have the frank and earnest people like Secretary Ickes, Harry Hopkins, Secretary Wallace, Miss Perkins, the Attorney General, and so on, into whose heads a political thought never enters. And to keep these people uncontaminated, to prevent temptation from ever entering their way, we have set up over here on the other side the political department, headed by Messrs. Jim Farley and Emil Hurja.

Manifestly, then, the opposition is not hitting the nail on the head when it says the Administration is politically motivated in the pouring out of funds. How could the Administration be thus accused when it is divided into an honest department and a political department?

Doesn't the honest department frequently express public disapproval of what the political department does? That shows in itself that there are two entirely separate and distinct departments.

* * * *

Other administrations did not have this sort of an organization. Under Mr. Hoover, for example, we looked upon Mr. Pat Hurley, the Secretary of War, as just as much of a politician as Mr. Walter Brown, the Postmaster General. So we considered all of Mr. Hoover's official family. The scholarly Secretary of the Interior, Dr. Wilbur, wanted to be a politician, even if he was not.

The present line-up is much better. Does anyone, for instance, think that Mr. Hopkins gives a thought to politics when he pours money into a State. He is not a politician at all. He is a professional pourer out of money. He will pour out money willingly as long as anybody furnishes it to him, and he can find places to pour it in. Does it suggest that he is politically influenced when Mr. Farley or Mr. Hurja drops around to show him another place to pour it? Certainly not. He appreciates the tip.

For two departments so far apart in ideals it does seem that the honest department and the political department, click amazingly well. But that is due to coordination without which any administration would be a flop.

African Issue Barrier To Paris-Rome Accord

The following dispatch, sent from Paris two weeks ago, is particularly timely in the light of yesterday's happenings at Marseilles, inasmuch as it helps to explain some of the background of present Franco-Italian relations.

By Andre Vulliet
(Special Correspondent of Post).

PARIS, Sept. 25 (By Mail).—The improvement of Franco-Italian relations, expected to follow French Foreign Minister Barthou's visit to Rome next month, seems likely to result mainly from an ill-feeling of Italy toward Germany rather than from a new friendly sentiment for France.

In fact, the gap between the two Latin nations is so wide that it will be hard to bridge it in any durable way. Under the threat of a common danger they may temporarily get together, as is the case now. The "atmosphere" is improved. The "atmosphere" is not enough.

Many vital questions, which, since the war, have stood in the way of a Franco-Italian rapprochement, will have to be solved before Paris and Rome can reach a constructive agreement.

The first obstacle to any such rapprochement is the unshakable conviction of every Italian that his country needs at all costs, and is entitled to, territorial expansion.

Italy's demands along the line of population and territory, for the time being, bear on the status of Italians in Tunis and Lybia's border.

Because Italians living in Tunisia, a French protectorate in North Africa, outnumber the French, the latter insist that Italian residents should become French citizens after the third generation (the first generation being the immigrant himself).

ITALY objects to this and wants her nationals to remain what they are. The situation now is ruled by a special arrangement, renewed every three months. The only concession France is willing to make is to allow Tunis Italians to retain their nationalism for four generations. For the French it is a question of retaining Tunis or letting it slip into Italian hands.

Lybia is an Italian colony which stretches its sandy hills between Tripoli and French territories north of Lake Tchad, in Central Africa. The Italian government, in accordance with a treaty signed in London in 1915, wants the French to make good their promise to modify the Lybian border.

But where Italy means "enlargement" the French understand "rectification." "We are ready to rectify certain salients of our frontier," they say, "but we will not put our African trails at Italy's mercy."

The French seem ready to give their neighbors strips of sand in the desert, with a few oases, wells and palm trees. But hardly an inch more. Countries never give up anything substantial, anyway, in the matter of territories, except in case of war. And it may be long before Italy and France agree on such questions.

Naval disarmament, the attitude toward Yugoslavia and revisionism in Central Europe are also among the chief stumbling blocks in the way of a Franco-Italian rapprochement.

Naval parity, it is understood, is the only question that may, and probably will, be delayed until next year.

Relations between Italy and Yugoslavia are becoming so bad, it is felt here, that something must be done about it lest it should be too late. Although German propaganda is accused of making the most of the situation and of pouring oil on the fire, it is realized there are hot-heads in both countries who excite their followers for no good reason at all.

SO long as the tension between Rome and Belgrade does not die down, the French government, it is felt here, will not run the risk of alienating the Yugoslavs for a problematic Italian agreement.

King Alexander of Yugoslavia is expected to visit Paris in the early part of October, prior to Barthou's trip to Rome. The French government, no doubt, will play a mediation role between the Italians and the Yugoslavs and leave no stone unturned to bring about a better understanding between the two countries. This is an essential condition to an eventual Franco-Italian entente.

As to Austria's independence, it is the only question on the principles of which France and Italy agree. But the means they propose to insure such independence differ so widely that an accord is difficult to reach.

The Italian government proposes a solution in which France, Great Britain and Italy alone would be interested. This, the Little Entente contends, would give Italy and her friend Hungary (whose revisionism they fear above all else) a preponderent position in central Europe.

The French insist that the problem should be tackled by all central European powers, including the Little Entente. But so long as Italy supports Hungary's revisionist policy, it will be no easy task to bring Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Yugoslavia and Italy in the same combination.

France is not ready to abandon the Little Entente. Italy is not willing to drop Hungary. So, even in the problem of Austria's independence which seems to have brought them closer, Italy and France are kept afar by their attitude toward the vital question of revisionism.

Il Duce may temporarily find it profitable to act in accord with France. But what is true today may no longer be so tomorrow. For, he often stated, "Foreign policy is a matter of imponderables."

Virginian Missing; Kidnaping Feared

Wife Says Collector Was Carrying $300.

Williamsburg, Va., Oct. 9 (AP).—Fear that W. M. Evans, life insurance collector, had been kidnaped and robbed caused State and city police to begin a wide search today.

Mrs. Evans said her husband had between $300 and $400 when he left last night to finish his city collections. Police said his personal habits were good and they could think of nothing other than foul play to explain his disappearance.

The case was linked by police with others this week in which two highwaymen have kidnaped two persons at different times and left them tied to trees on mountain tops after robbing them.

Park Deeds Returned For Technical Changes

The Justice Department said yesterday the Shenandoah National Park land deeds were returned to the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission, "for correction as to form," according to the Associated Press.

The return of the deeds, the department said, had nothing to do with the filing of an injunction suit last week by two former property owners in the park area to prevent Secretary Ickes from accepting the lands from Virginia. The deeds were returned to the Virginia commission's lawyer ten days ago, it was said. The corrections would change the grantor of the property from the Commonwealth of Virginia to the Governor of the Commonwealth and the conservation commission.

A department official said the commission was expected to bring the deeds back to Washington in a few days.

Litz, Senate Candidate, Campaigns in Richmond

Richmond, Va., Oct. 9 (AP).—J. L. Litz, former Republican member of the Virginia House of Delegates from Wise and Dickenson counties and now an independent candidate for the United States Senate, was in Richmond today distributing copies of his campaign platform, which contains 25 planks.

Mr. Litz said he left the Republican fold in 1928 to vote for Al Smith, and four years later supported Roosevelt. The question now, he asserts, is whether Roosevelt or Wall Street is to rule the Nation. He disagrees with Roosevelt only on policies relating to soldiers and crop reduction, exclusive of tobacco.

Trout Planted in Creek.

Hyndman, Pa., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Eighty cans of brown trout, ranging in size from 8 to 16 inches, were planted in Will's Creek yesterday, from this point to the Somerset line. The presiding officers of the meeting included, Booton Hitt, chairman; the Rev. Charles C. Clement, president of the pastors' conference; Ara W. Smith, R. H. Hutcherson and Mrs. P. M. Under the new program auditors attached to each local administration will prepare and disburse the pay rolls, but final authority over the general application of relief funds will continue to remain with the boards of supervisors. ## A Superb Plea for World Peace by the Last Man You Would Expect to Write It.

By Theodore Hall.

A CERTAIN English gentleman had a day dream—he tells of it in the little blue and gold-jacketed book beside me—in which Messrs. Ramsay MacDonald, Doumergue, Mussolini and Hitler all came to dinner, all stayed afterward for an informal, easy-chatting "peace conference." Our author talks turkey to them.

THEO. HALL.

"The peace of Europe is in your hands. I mean just that. I do not mean that it is in the hands of England, France, Italy and Germany . . . There is no German bogey but Hitler; no Chauvinistic Italy but Mussolini; no intractable France but Doumergue; no perfidious Albion but MacDonald. You four men are not at the mercy of irresistible forces, before which you must needs patch up some hasty defense; you are confronted by nothing more terrifying than is to be found amongst yourselves."

And then our author goes on to propose a plan for peace, based on nothing more nor less destructible than good faith, described with the simplest logic, bolstered with the most cutting and flaying of arguments. "I am allowing," he says, "the great men of Europe a minimum of intelligence, a minimum of humanity, a minimum of honor. I am suggesting that they are just intelligent enough to realize that another European war will mean complete disaster for the world."

In every detail of principle he sets forth a plea for the only possible way toward lasting peace.

* * * *

Now who do you suppose this living English writer is? I could give you 500 guesses, and you wouldn't touch him. Without waiting, let me bring forward Mr. A. A. Milne, best known to the world as the author of such charming children's verse as "Winnie the Pooh."

But don't think I intend this form of introduction as any sort at all of anticlimax. For his remarkably sound and outspoken little volume—"Peace With Honour" (Dutton, $2)—casts this odium upon all the learned pundits and scholarly disquisitors, upon all the professional weighers of war and peace, that they can not see the forest for the trees.

* * * *

The art of candid autobiography takes a step forward in Thomas Dent's "Then a Soldier . . ." (John Day, $2.75). Behind this nom de plume, a "well-known young English author" tells a story of boyhood and youth which is too true to be pleasant, but not too true to stand as literature.

His early days among Zulus on an African farm, his agonizing school days in England, his self-conscious experience with sex, his revolt when war breaks out, his imprisonment as an objector, his struggles at Oxford and his desperate marriage—all this will be read as revelation by some people, as memory by others. The body changes its cells every seven years. It is thus, in the persons of Tom I, Tom II and Tom III, that this clear-seeing author looks back upon his life.

* * * *

Emily Hahn wrote "Seductio Ad Absurdam," and everybody laughed at her wit. Then she visited Africa and returned with "Congo Solo," a travel book so markedly excellent that it added several cubits to her stature.

Now, her novel, "With Naked Foot" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2), will add another cubit. It is the tale of Mawa, a Congo woman, who rises from the pages as an admirable human being, of her child, and of her white masters. Miss Hahn lets her story stand on its own feet and respect itself. Few readers, indeed, will fail to call it a superb feat of narration.

* * * *

About as far from the Congo as you can imagine is the coast of Maine, of which Mary Ellen Chase, author of "A Goodly Heritage," now writes this calm but nostalgic novel, "Mary Peters" (Macmillan, $2.50). The heroine was born off Singapore in 1871, sailed for 15 years on her father's vessel. Then she came back to the land, but her sea memories were always with her.

Miss Chase preserves for us, better than anyone else in these latter days, the heart-warming feel and tempo of village life on the Maine coast before the summer people came. Anyone with a drop of "Down East" blood will relish this sterling novel.

* * * *

If you are of an age to remember the bicycles, the Sunday picnics, and the bird-eggs collections of the nineties, I don't suppose any other book this year will please you so deeply as Henry Seidel Canby's "The Age of Confidence" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50).

Within its leisurely and mellow pages, the editor of the Saturday Review of Literature relates his youthful memories of Wilmington, Del. But what he has to say of the stern eyes of parents and the family dinner table, of the attitude toward marriage and of the first sensibility toward religion, will fit everyone else who lived in such a town in such a time.

We won't see that era again. But not a reader of Dr. Canby's eloquent reminiscing, of whatever age he may be, will put down this book without a bone-deep feeling of regret.

H. I. Phillips' Once Over

Pass the Doughnuts

October is National Doughnut Month. This is reassuring news. No matter how the country may be fixed otherwise, the doughnut situation remains unimpaired.

* * * *

Sample doughnuts have been received by this department and placed on file. Hole for hole, they compare with any doughnut in history. The Democrats are claiming credit for a smaller hole, but this is open to dispute. It looks like the same hole the doughnut had under Hoover.

* * * *

But why quibble over doughnut holes? The doughnut is still with us. It has survived NRA, AAA, Gen. Johnson, the brain trust, Robbie and everything.

* * * *

Banks have toppled, mortgage houses have crashed, business institutions have collapsed, the dollar, the Constitution and Jim Farley have run a fever, but the doughnut has held its own.

* * * *

It hasn't been inflated, deflated, reduced, adulterated, repudiated or changed in anyway. It hasn't been investigated, impounded, confiscated, denounced, reconstructed or debased.

* * * *

It remains a doughnut, intact and undisguised.

* * * *

It has escaped the blight of a doughnut code, a doughnut administration and a doughnut custodian.

* * * *

It remains the doughnut of the Pilgrim fathers, the doughnut of the pioneers, the doughnut of Plymouth, Bunker Hill, Ticonderoga, Valley Forge and Appomatox.

* * * *

The doughnut of Franklin D. Roosevelt is the doughnut of George Washington, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Ulysses Grant, Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson.

* * * *

It has weathered the depression, it has withstood the gale, it has survived the earthquakes. It has even remained indifferent to Huey Long.

* * * *

Nothing but a revolution can change it.

* * * *

Hopeful Note.

This is Beer Week, and possibly the brewers in session in various cities will do something about the return of the 5-cent glass.

The recovery party of New York, headed by Judge John F. Hylan, has taken up with Judge Hylan the matter of picking a suitable man for Governor, and has picked Judge Hylan, it is announced by Judge Hylan.

What!

These are the words that I never foresaw—
Words that are burning and bitter—
This is the paragraph smiting and raw:
"Dean taken out for a hitter!"

Political Note.

"We must realize that Mr. Franklin Roosevelt has behind that attractive smile, behind that charming radio voice, behind that marvelous political adroitness, a fundamental untrustworthiness. . . . He just isn't square. . . . What we've got to do is to get into our minds a realistic picture of Franklin Roosevelt. . . . We must learn to see him not as a charmer, but as a more than usually unscrupulous player with 'our lives, our liberties and our sacred honor.'"—Julian Mason, vice president of the National Republican Builders.

As Quillen Looks at It

Trial Isn't Fair If Some Witnesses Won't Talk

By Robert Quillen.

Some years ago this department predicted that cities eventually would follow the example of States and the Nation and levy a tax on private incomes.

Now that New York City has led the way, the idea should spread like a plague.

To bewildered city governments, facing ever-increasing deficits, the income tax affords a way out that is too easy and too polite to be disregarded.

True, it is a class tax and therefore seems unfair to the class affected. But if it burdens the few to relieve the many, that is precisely the circumstance that makes it an ideal method of getting revenue. It produces a great sum of money while offending a small number of voters.

Whether it is right or wrong is a matter no longer worth debating. It is here to stay and nothing can be done about it. The number who benefit by it will always be greater than the number who pay it, and that guarantees it eternal support in a land of majority rule.

There is, however, one particular in which it might be improved, both in the quality of justice and the quantity of revenue.

Under the present arrangement, the tax makes its peace with the Constitution by granting all citizens a certain exemption. This keeps it from being a class tax within the meaning of the law and at the same time exempts the great majority entirely.

But that exemption encourages dodging. All of us know persons—doubtless hundreds of thousands in the aggregate—who make taxable incomes and never make returns.

Once a taxpayer's name is on the records, he can never escape. But so long as he makes no return, and either keeps no books or discreetly doctors the record of his profits, no government agent molests him.

There must be legions near the border line of exemption who escape by playing 'possum.

Gathering them into the fold to share the privilege of paying expenses would be a simple matter.

Leave the exemptions as they now are to prevent any legitimate complaint. Then require every citizen to make a return, whether his income is large or small.

The income statistics obtained would be worth the cost.

And experience has shown that people will declare an untruth by simple evasion and yet not dare to perjure themselves when the lie is a matter of record.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

The Ten Thousand Dollar Word.

William Lyon Phelps.

A correspondent obligingly calls my attention, in connection with the spelling of the word "tranquillity," to an amusing incident which fixed the correct spelling forever in his mind.

"Once our Government was getting out a new issue of paper money, and on the back of a certain bill was to be engraved the Preamble to the United States Constitution. The person who had prepared the original copy had spelled tranquillity with only one 'l.' Plates valued at $10,000 had already been engraved before the error was detected. An expensive mistake, and an argument for better spelling in both school and college."

It was spelled with two "l's" in the original document, according to a supposedly accurate reprint I found in an authoritative work. But in the year 1892, when I was an instructor in English at Harvard, I corrected an undergraduate for using only one "l." My superior officer, the famous Prof. Barret Wendell, told me the boy was right. Since that time, I found it spelled with only one "l" in a novel by George Meredith. But whatever may have been right in 1892, in 1934 one "l" is wrong. The Englishman, the late H. W. Fowler, in his truly glorious "Dictionary of Modern English Usage," says, referring to one instead of two "ls," "misspellings are very common," especially in this very word, where two "ls" are absolutely required.

Fowler gives the rule for many cases where the single or double is permissible. Of course there is a difference between English and American usage in many common words; "traveler" and "marvelous" are practically unknown in England.

In spelling another word say either "pedlar" or "peddler;" but never "pedler." I like the first spelling best.

The British usually write "sceptic" and American "skeptic;" here Fowler prefers the American. "We might pocket our pride and copy," he says.

But that spoils the familiar nonsense: "The King was clothed in the garbage of royalty and carried a sceptic in his right hand."

I am afraid we should have a hard time persuading American professionals to abandon the word "chiropodist" however pronounced ("kiropodist" only is right). Fowler calls the word a barbarism and a genteelism; he hates it. He says we should use only the word "corn-cutter"—can you imagine the toe-nail painters agreeing to that?

Genteelisms are the terrible substitutes for simple speech. I once called Phillips Academy, Andover, an institution instead of a school; but I never did it again.

Anyhow, don't say "cuspidor;" say "spittoon." Wyld's Dictionary defines "cuspidor" as "American refined name for vulgar object, a spittoon."

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

"LITTLE WOMEN," that poignant portrayal of joys and tribulations of Jo, Meg, Beth, Amy and Marmee, already famous for its huge success on stage and screen, now comes to radio in serial form in a locally produced and acted adaptation to be heard Mondays and Thursdays, starting October 15, from 6:30 to 6:45 p. m. from WRC.

It will be cast entirely from local acting talent and directed by Laura Staggers, of Radio Associates, who had a large hand in staging of the popular "Headlines of Yesterday," sponsored last winter by The Washington Post. Shannon Allen, WRC's production manager, responsible for "Washington Airbreaks," will serve as supervising director.

The most intensive rehearsing since the "Headlines" is going on right now at WRC, where much speculating is being done over casting the tomboyish Jo, the serious Meg, the frail Beth, the flighty Amy and mother Marmee. They are looking for the Hepburn type, some one untried but with a knack for the stage, to play Jo.

"Washington is chock full of experienced actors," commented Mr. Allen, "but we'll have to use and find younger girls, possibly not so experienced, but who have a natural talent for that sort of thing." . . . meaning, of course, the charming hoydenish antics of Jo.

LISTENERS not blessed with short wave sets will have their appetites teased today when C. B. S. airs one-minute flashes of typical programs from five foreign countries during Kate Smith's matinee hour from 3 to 4 p. m.

Ted Collins, who has been Kate's manager these many years, will interview Caesar Searchinger, C. B. S.'s foreign observer, who will note and describe broadcasting from England, France, Germany, Italy and Spain.

The program also marks the air debut of pretty Adelaide Moffett, debutante daughter of James A. Moffett, Federal Housing chief, who entered the "Hollywood Hotel" auditions under the name of "Diana Dorrance." Kate heard her at the finals and decided she needed coaching.

WHEN Amos 'n' Andy present their famous crew from the stage of the Fox Theater starting Friday, October 19, they will bring with them for his first visit to the Capital Bill Hay, who has announced their broadcast since their introduction to radio.

PROMISING the American listening public "radio programs it wants to hear," the American Broadcasting System, hitherto called radio's "baby chain," will begin operation Sunday with 21 stations, an increase of 13 outlets.

Among the new stations and affiliates will be Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis and Cleveland. Daily network operation will be from 9 a. m. to 1 a. m. This means that WOL, A. B. S.'s Washington outlet, will carry programs right straight on through the day without its usual break from 1 to 3 p. m.

According to officials, "plans are not to duplicate the programs of other networks, but rather to produce an originality of operation not merely in statement but in fact. The crowded schedules of the other systems and their development of talent make it impossible for them to present all the numerous features which are constantly clamoring for expression. Many of these not otherwise recognized will find a place on A. B. S."

Occupying the evening hours from 6 p. m., the new network will stage a gala celebration Sunday with distinguished guests saluting A. B. S. from Washington, and leaders in many allied fields joining in.

IT'S been definitely set that Eddie Cantor will desert N. B. C. for Columbia networks starting Sunday, February 3, from 8 to 8:30 p. m. Another shift to C. B. S. brings N. B. C.'s Hall of Fame, that brilliant array of guest stars, to the studios on New York's Madison avenue, starting January 6. Who is next?

Razing of Houses Aids Health Drive

Annapolis Heads Also Order Repairs to Nine.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Pushing a campaign for better housing conditions in certain sections of the city as a safeguard to health, municipal authorities of Annapolis today directed the razing of one house and improvement of nine others by way of sanitary plumbing and installation of running water.

The action was the result of a survey recently completed by Health Officer Dr. James J. Murphy and a committee of the city council, and is likely to be directed against owners of a number of other properties.

The house to be demolished is a two-story frame structure at Compromise and Chestnut streets, near the harbor front, and is owned by the same man who owns seven of the other houses to be reconditioned. The other two houses under the ban are situated in Rideout street.

Fauquier Hospital Fund Drive Starts

County Will Be Solicited in Financial Crisis.

Two teams, captained by E. E. Risdon and C. C. Pearson, representatives of the Warrenton Chamber of Commerce, will solicit Warrenton and vicinity. Committees have been appointed to cover the entire county. Several Fauquier physicians will go into the adjoining counties which sen ' patients to the Warrenton institution.

U. S. Judge Irked By Liquor Cases

Local Court Should Try Them, Chesnut Says.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.). Judge W. Calvin Chesnut, United States District Court, yesterday expressed dissatisfaction with State authorities for turning over small liquor law violators to the Federal authorities instead of trying them in their local courts by sentencing such an offender to one day in jail.

The case which caused Judge Chesnut to express his opinion, involved two colored men accused of transporting three quarts of untaxed liquor. When turned over to the Federal Court by Chief of Police N. H. Holland, of Salisbury, Judge Chesnut declared Wicomico County was capable of trying such cases and demanded to know why such an action was not taken. Holland replied that State courts were far too lenient on liquor offenders.

Declaring that Federal courts do not always give the greater sentences, Judge Chesnut sentenced one of the defendants to one day in jail and dismissed the other on grounds of being ignorantly involved.

In the Piedmont League play of 1932, Greensboro won the first half of the season and Charlotte won the second half. In the seven-game play-off series for the league championship, Edward (Dutch) Chapman won for Greensboro singlehanded. He pitched and won four of the seven games played.

* * * *

Strange as it seems, the world's champion high jumper, Walter Marty, practiced for more than a month with the bar set at 2 feet. Even then, with the bar so low that he could step over it, he used to knock it off time and again. That was seven years ago when he was in Fresno High School, and at that time he was perfecting his style of jumping—the Western roll. This same style has since carried him over the bar at 6 feet 9½ inches for the unofficial world title.

While Marty was just another high school jumper trying to get the swing of the Western roll his coach, Athletic Director Rudolph Fahl, saw a world champion in the making. That same year Fahl wrote a review of Fresno athletic activities for the year in which he predicted that Marty would some day break the world's record for the high jump.

Marty made good the coach's prediction. He jumped 5 feet 9 inches in a dual high school meet in 1927 for Fresno High School—and he has been jumping over higher and higher bars ever since.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

They Are Mighty Busy and Happy

If that wasn't a busy day at Blackie's house, there never was one. After they had worked all the day before to straighten out things in the smokehouse and make room for the Thanksgiving things that Mr. Man was going to send them, they still had to pile things up and hang things here and there before they could get everything in.

And you may just know that Mr. Man was not the only one that was going to have sausages and spareribs and pig's feet. Jocko and Jay Bird had been around other people's houses so much that they knew all about fixing such things, and it didn't take Dr. Coon and Billie Possum long to learn how to help. So for two days the Creek Folks had all that anybody wanted to do, and when meal time came they had all that anybody wanted to eat. And they certainly did have a good time over their coffee and pipes every night.

Mr. Man and his wife were not the only ones that had enough to talk about to keep them up late at night, for there was certainly plenty for the Creek Folks to talk about, and a lot of it was funny. It would make anybody laugh to see Jocko get before the other Creek Folks and show how Mr. Man jumped and ran faster when Jocko shot the second time.

And it was nearly as funny to hear Jay Bird tell about the way Mr. Man showed the others how it all happened, and how big the man was that shot at him and took his wagon. And to hear Who-Who tell how awfully mad Mr. Man was when he began running back for his hat and then how scared he was the next minute when Jocko shot the limb off over his head, was enough to make other people than funny old Billie Possum laugh.

Hee-Haw had his own laugh over it when he was there with Blackie, and he said that he expected to get some more laughs out of hearing Mr. Man tell folks about that awful man that was so tall that when he shot a gun he was holding it up in the tree tops and shooting the limbs off.

Hunt Thief

Harrisonburg Youth Took Employer's Auto.

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 9 (Spl.). Police are seeking Marion Raines, 21, who drove away with the automobile of his employer, Frank L. Sublett, "father of the Shenandoah Valley, Inc."

Raines was employed as chauffeur for Sublett who is disabled following a stroke of paralysis. He drove away in the Sublett machine a week ago. There were two outbreaks of fire while a storm was raging, each being brought under control.

Funds Lacking For Savage Dam

Cumberland Man Urges Water District Tax.

Cumberland, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Charles J. Bruce, superintendent of the Cumberland Water Works and representative of the city on the Upper Potomac River Board, told the mayor and city council yesterday that prospect of Federal aid being given the Savage River dam project was remote. He said the application was denied by the Public Works Administration because it was not the sort that should be 100 per cent Federal and the PWA has no funds at this time.

Mr. Bruce outlined procedure that may be followed if the city desired to pursue the project further. He suggested all communities from Luke to Cumberland on the Maryland side of the river and all industries and groups that would benefit from the proposed dam be organized into a water district with taxing power. This would require the authority of the Legislature.

Such an organization could plan a special form of taxation to finance the dam and it is thought the Federal Government might be induced to meet a portion of the cost of the proposed structure.

Auto Kills Man, 65, Hit-Run Driver Sought

Receptions Called Off By Tragedy in France

Capital's Program of Entertainment in Honor of Delegates of Aeronautic Federation, Meeting Here This Week, Is Curtailed.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The tragic death yesterday of Alexander I, the King of Yugoslavia, cut short the festivities planned for the entertainment of the delegates to the Federation Aeronautique Internationale which is meeting here this week.

The dinner which was to have been given last evening by the Minister of Rumania, Mr. Charles A. Davila, in honor of the president of the F. A. I., Prince Georges Valentine Bibesco, and Princess Marthe Bibesco, was canceled immediately, as was the reception which was to have followed, for Queen Marie of Yugoslavia is a sister of King Carol of Rumania.

Yesterday afternoon the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, accompanied by Mr. James Clement Dunn, chief of protocol, called at the Yugoslav Legation at the request of the President to offer condolences in his name to the Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Bojidar Stoianovitch, who had also canceled the dinner and reception planned for last evening. Later Mr. Hull and Mr. Dunn called upon the Ambassador of France, M. Andre de Laboulaye, to offer condolences for the death of M. Louis Barthou, Foreign Minister of the French Republic, who was also assassinated yesterday.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt canceled the reception planned for yesterday afternoon in honor of the delegates, and the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik, who were entertaining at dinner in honor of the Austrian delegate and Princess Kinsky, canceled their party.

All the embassies and legations here deferred entertaining yesterday. The Minister of Egypt, Ibrahim Ratib Bey, postponed the large reception planned for yesterday in celebration of the accession of King Fuad I. In no other city in the country does the death or illness of a member of royalty, or of the nobility so affect society, for here are gathered representatives from nearly every nation in the world, and though not always directly touched by events, there is a courtesy among them all which curbs entertaining in times of trouble.

The French Ambassador and Mme. de Laboulaye have canceled their dinner for this evening in honor of the Secretary General of the F. A. I. and Mme. Tissandier, and another French delegate, Mr. Louis Bleriot, and Mme. Bleriot. The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Daniel C. Roper, has recalled the invitations for a large reception which was to have been given in the Chamber of Commerce Building this evening, and the Naval Attache of the German Embassy, Capt. Robert Witthoeft, has canceled the cocktail party he was having for the German delegate, Herr Wolfgang von Gronau. The First Secretary of the Legation of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Broz also canceled the dinner they had planned for last evening.

German Envoy's Daughter Weds Here on Oct. 20

Fraulein Gertraud Luther Will Marry Gerrit von Haeften.

The first diplomatic wedding of the season in Washington will be that of Fraulein Gertraud Luther, daughter of the Ambassador of Germany, Dr. Hans Luther, and Herr Gerrit von Haeften, Attache of the embassy, which will take place Saturday, October 20.

The ceremony will be performed at 3 o'clock in the Concordia Lutheran Church, at Nineteenth and G streets, by the Rev. Charles Enders, rector of the church, assisted by the Rev. F. O. Everts, of Baltimore. A large assembly of guests from diplomatic, official and resident circles will attend the ceremony, and the reception which will follow immediately at the embassy.

Fraulein Luther will be attended by Fraulein Sibilla von Haeften, sister of the bridegroom, who with her mother, Frau Elli von Haeften, recently arrived from Berlin. Fraulein Adelheid von Boetticher, daughter of the Military Attache of the embassy, and Frau von Boetticher; Fraulein Adelheid Leitner, daughter of the Counselor of the embassy and Frau Leitner; Fraulein Ina Borchers, daughter of the German Consul General in New York, and Fraulein Louise Everts, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Everts.

There will be three small flower girls, Lotti Leitner, Lilli Lohmann, small daughter of the second secretary of the embassy and Frau Lohmann, and Giesela Teichmann.

Dr. Luther to Give Dinner.

Herr von Haeften will be attended by the Third Secretary of Embassy, Herr Gustave Struve; the Third Secretary of Embassy, Herr Richard Paulig, and two young men from the Consulate General in New York, Dr. Draeger and Dr. Kempe.

That evening the Ambassador will entertain at a dinner following the reception for members of the bridal party, members of the embassy staff, and close relatives. Herr von Haeften and his bride will make their home in New York after their marriage, where the former will be attached to the German Consulate General.

Will Follow Tradition.

On Friday evening, October 19, the Ambassador will follow an old German tradition, and will entertain a large company of young people at "Polterabend." Polterabend means, when translated freely, wedding eve, and is celebrated by a gathering of close friends to wish luck and happiness to the bride and bridegroom. It is a very gay affair, and each guest when wishing well to the young couple breaks his or her plate against a door. After the dinner there are games which usually include a pantomime of some event from the lives of the young people to be married. All sorts of traditional games and customs are enacted, and some guest dressed as one of the servants usually appears to ask for employment with the couple about to be wed.

Interesting Set Assembles at Cocktail Party

Society Looking Forward to Opening Night of Pleasure Craft.

Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller and her father, Mr. Oscar T. Crosby, both of whom seem to have a faculty for gathering around them the most interesting kind of people, entertained Monday afternoon at another of the informal cocktail parties of which they are giving a series this autumn.

The guests included the retiring Military Attache of the British Embassy, Col. Maurice Fitzmaurice Day, who sails Friday to join Mrs. Day in England; the Commercial Counselor of the Embassy and Mrs. H. O. Chalkley, who have just returned from a summer spent in England, Mrs. Chalkley looking very smart in a black ensemble with rich furs; the Commercial Secretary of the Embassy and Mrs. J. H. Magowan, the latter also recently returned from England. Mrs. Magowan wore a costume of beige wool with a small hat to match, and seemed just a little surprised at hearing numerous other guests address her husband, whose name is really John, as "Herbert." It was explained finally that his likeness to Herbert Marshall, screen actor, had caused the nick-name.

Guests Include Mrs. Grainger.

Mrs. Alfred Grainger was there with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Brown, jr., of Chicago and New York, who have recently come to Washington for the winter and are occupying the house on Massachusetts avenue which was occupied last season by Mrs. Francis A. Whitten. Also with Mrs. Grainger was Mrs. Russell Lord, who is residing in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jean Delattre-Seguy this season. Mrs. Seguy and their children have sailed for France to spend a year and Mr. Seguy has taken an apartment in Georgetown until Christmas, when he will join his family.

Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, who has recently returned to town, was there, wearing a gown of printed crepe in black and beige, and a large black hat.

But far the most interesting of the guests was young Mrs. Alwyn Inness-Brown, of Plandome, Long Island. Mrs. Inness-Brown, who is small and dark, and wore a frock of lipstick-red crepe with a small black hat, is the former Miss Virginia Portia Royall, and was a roommate of Mrs. Miller at the Warrenton Country School. She is in Washington on a delighful mission. With her brother, Mr. Robert Royall, of Boston, she is living aboard the four-masted schooner, Constellation. The craft's presence on the Potomac River has caused much curiosity.

Craft Turned Into Club.

Mr. Royall bought the schooner in Maine several years ago, and after reconditioning it he and Mrs. Inness-Brown have turned it into the smartest of night clubs. With great success they ran the club in Booth Bay Harbor, Me., last summer, and have been persuaded to continue the venture here for a few weeks. The Constellation as a pleasure craft is being sponsored by Mr. John Hays Hammond, jr., and some time within the next few days, probably Saturday, will be ready to tie up at Harbor Masters' Dock for the opening night.

There will be luncheon, tea, and dinner served each day aboard the schooner, and dancing every night in the main salon, which has been decorated with pine-paneled walls, long bare tables, and ship lamps. It is a novel idea, and flocks of members of Capital society are making reservations for the opening night, which will be announced later.

Early in December, Mr. Royall and his sister will take the ship to Miami to try their luck there, and in between, Mrs. Inness-Brown will return to her home on Long Island to be with her husband, young son and daughter for some time.

Pillar to Post

HAVING spent most of his life in the prosaic practice of the law, Judge Bert E. Fish, Minister to Egypt, is finding the strange smile of that cryptic country particularly seductive. The bachelor envoy is as enamored with the land that has hidden shining secrets for 6,000 years, as he might be with a beautiful woman who has a Sphinx-like mystery in her eyes.

* * * *

In his suite at the Mayflower while here on leave he spoke of the year he has just spent in Egypt as the most romantic in his life. He loves to take trips on that ancient sacred river, the Nine, but no doubt he would ridicule the idea that he imagined himself a part of those brilliant pageants that passed back and forth there long ago, perhaps as a great man sitting upon a deck with slaves to pull the oars, musicians, lotus lilies and dancers to delight him. To admit such dreams would be to lower the dignity of a hard-headed American and a power in the National Democratic organization. Yet he does admit that he is strangely fascinated by the marvelous monuments that remain to tell the power and the glory of the past, and he frequently leaves Cairo to visit the pyramids and ancient ruined temples.

* * * *

WASHINGTONIANS who have visited him in Cairo were proud of the warmth with which his name was greeted by the Egyptians and the English and delighted that we had an owner of an orange grove in Florida who also is acquainted with the growing of cotton and tobacco, the principal pursuits of the country to which he is accredited, so that he can speak and act with unusual intelligence on the subjects bound to come to his attention.

Judge Fish is somewhat shy, yet genial, and because he puts on no "side" everybody likes him. Unaffected by his being at a small but one of the most formal courts of our day, he upholds with a simple dignity the position he holds there from our country.

* * * *

The fanfare accorded him when he presented his credentials to King Fuad was typical.

A cavalcade of royal carriages bearing the King's crest and filled with 40 dignitaries of the court conveyed him to the royal palace. He was asked to wear a dress suit, a white tie and a black waistcoat (nobody knows why), with a silk top hat. Upon being presented to King Fuad, in the throne room, he bowed deeply from the waist, silk hat held to his breast, but custom requires that there be no handshaking in this episode. Felicitations were exchanged by the monarch and the minister, and then the latter backed out of the throne room, bowing slightly as he went.

* * * *

He was returned to the legation in the same spectacular way as he came, accompanied by the 40 court dignitaries in brilliantly colored baggy trousers and zouave jackets embroidered in gold, wearing the red fez ordained by their religion. One can imagine that the simple Southerner breathed deeply with relief when it was all over. The one who benefited most on this occasion was the quavass, the Egyptian bodyguard attached to all foreign diplomats. He received a gratuity of 10 pounds from the king and the minister reciprocated by providing similar gratuities for the court chamberlain and the chief carriage driver of the cavalcade.

* * * *

THE legation is an imposing residence in the heart of Cairo where six streets converge. Of gray stone and French in design, it is surrounded by a formal garden filled with a great variety of exotic flowers. He takes turns in asking various matrons in the American colony to act as hostess for him, but a large part of his entertaining is confined to gentlemen, as the Moslem rules does not permit women to appear at social gatherings where men are present.

Buffalo Girl to Marry Special Aid to Roosevelt Adviser.

Mr. and Mrs. Roderick Potter, of Buffalo, N. Y., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary Frances Potter, to Mr. Henry Carter, of Williamstown, Mass., and Washington.

Mr. Carter is the son of the Rev. J. Franklin Carter, of Williamstown, and the late Alice Schermerhorn Henry, of East Orange, N. J. He is a graduate of St. Mark's School, Southboro, Mass., and Yale. He served overseas as first lieutenant of the Air Service. After postgraduate studies at Yale and Harvard, he was connected for several years with the Department of State, his last post being that of American Charge d'Affaires to Liberia. He is at present special assistant to George N. Peek, the special adviser to the President on foreign trade. He is a member of Psi Upsilon and of Wolf's Head Society.

The wedding will take place October 20 in Westminster Church, Buffalo, and will be followed by a small reception.

Invitations Issued For Debutante Ball

Costume Dance to Be Held at Shoreham Halloween.

The invitations for the Debutantes' Halloween Ball to be held at the Shoreham, Halloween eve, have been issued. This promises to be a very beautiful and unusual party. The debutantes, in costume, will receive with Mrs. Helen Ray Hagner. The men of the floor committee and the members of the young married committee, will also be in costume. All the younger group are planning their costumes now. Expensive costumes will be worn; many plan to wear family heirlooms; others will wear costumes less costly, and the original and comical costumes will liven up the party. The older group will also be in costume, although it is not obligatory, and all will enter into the spirit of happiness and fun that is always seen at this ball.

Mrs. H. L. Merring, who spent the summer visiting at Newport, R. I., and Old Point Comfort, Va., has returned to Washington and has opened her apartment at the Fairfax Hotel.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

What a glorious day it was yesterday! Golden sunshine, crisp, falling leaves, n'everything.

In the morning I ran into two Bettles (Hartz and Cremen), who were just recuperating from much photographing. Betty C. had on a trick brown felt hat, which was attached to a long and silky tassel (the latter annoyed the other Bette no end).

Mary Senate, although buried deep in the volumes of history and science, has selected her costume for the much discussed tacky ball. She is going as Jo of "Little Women," and I believe that Lokey Bradford will be the "Doctor Bhaer" of the evening.

Mary McDowell is right back in the midst of things, more popular than ever. Yesterday afternoon she was shopping downtown, attired in a smart woolen frock of dark gray mixture, a gay, red, white and black printed kerchief knotted about her throat and a large, flat black felt hat perched at a becoming angle on her blonde head.

Art Studies Result in Successful Career For Woman in Three Full-Time Ventures

Shop Operated by Mrs. Plauche Is New Orleans Show Place

She Also Designs Mardi Gras Costumes, Makes Pralines Shipped All Over World, Illustrates Catalogues and Does Portraits.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

RECENTLY, when I wandered the streets of New Orleans' old French quarter, I was looking for the little theater—Le Petit Theatre du Vieux Carre—one of the famous landmarks of the modern South. But I have already forgotten the details of the attractive auditorium and the picturesque patio of that quaint, Lilliputian playhouse; while I still remember all about a shop a block away that attracts as many visitors as the theater itself.

Why? Chiefly because the owner, Leda H. Plauche, is one of the most ingenious and versatile business women in New Orleans. Because her shop contains an attractive display of costumes designed by her and worn at past Mardi Gras balls. And because pralines made at this address are shipped all over the world.

The shop, called the Green Orchid, on St. Peter street, is only one of Mrs. Plauche's many successful projects. Besides supervising work there, she handles, without assistance, more contracts for costumes than any artist in the South, illustrates a catalogue for a children's clothing wholesale house, designs numerous hand-made gifts, does portraits and makes all types of pen-and-ink sketches.

Worth a Special Trip.

If I had known all this before I happened to walk into her shop, I would have made a special trip just to catch a glimpse of her, for this tall woman with sparkling eyes and silver threads in her dark curly hair is as attractive as any woman in New Orleans. Svelte and apparently as fragile as the most sheltered drawing-room type of person, she looks at least a decade younger than her 48 years.

I was aware of her originality before I ever entered her shop. A life-sized Mammy doll in a checkered apron and bandanna stands by the entrance. And while I hesitated, "Mammy" invited me to come in.

The idea of talking at her desk through a megaphone connected with the stuffed figure outside her shop, so the invitation apparently comes from "Mammy" is only one of Mrs. Plauche's many unusual ideas.

The French provincial fireplace that decorates the rear of the shop and the inner court, with its tropical plants, opening out of the gift room and into the kitchen where the pralines are cooked and cooled, keeps the Green Orchid from being an ordinary gift shop and makes it, rather, one of the showplaces of the old French quarter.

Mrs. Plauche's career—I later learned—has been built step by step on unique ideas, generously seasoned with initiative and energy.

Three Full-Time Jobs.

All these are responsible for the fact she has made, even in depression times, outstanding successes of three full-time jobs besides homemaking.

"The depression gave me my chance," she told me. "If my husband hadn't lost so much money in the stock market crash, I doubt I would ever have found how many different things I can do."

But how, I asked her, had she managed to handle the skeins of so many jobs, without getting them tangled? How, in the first place, had she become trained in so many different lines?

"Well, as a child, I wanted to be an artist," she said, "but my father objected, insisting a girl had no chance to gain either fame or financial success in that field.

"Later, he was to change his mind about that," she smiled, "but his objection then meant I couldn't take any courses in art. I had to teach myself. I began by copying fashion plates. Later, I made comic strips. Then I took up water color, all the time working out the different problems myself in my own way. I have never had a single lesson."

She continued studying art on her own initiative while she went through secondary school and later when she attended Newcombe College.

"But it was long after I had graduated from Newcombe, and after I married and had two children that my self-directed art study began to bring in returns," she recalled.

Found Some Spare Time.

The wife of Henry Plauche, superintendent of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, she spent the first few years of her married like making her home attractive for her husband, daughter and son.

"But even then I found some spare time," she said, "and I continued to learn every phase of art from commercial drawing to portrait painting.

LEDA H. PLAUCHE,
Moses Studio, New Orleans.
versatile Creole business woman, who wrested three successful jobs from the depression.

"Eventually, I felt I knew enough about the former to make some money. At first my husband mildly objected to my entering the world of business, but since so many women were filling positions left by men who had gone to the war he finally consented to my accepting a place with Maison Blanche, the South's largest department store, as a commercial artist."

For ten years she continued work at the Maison Blanche, handling every type of art from dress designing to catalogue making.

"The work was so pleasant and so varied I might have been there yet if the depression hadn't caused me to go into business for myself.

Decides to Branch Out.

"First I opened the gift shop, then I started the praline business. All this time I was still illustrating the children's catalogue, but I decided to branch out and design all types of costumes. That's how I came to get contracts for the carnival pageants and balls.

"Carnival doesn't begin until January 6," she said, "but I've been working on costumes for the next once since last March. There is so much more than the average person realizes to be done.

"It's fascinating work, deciding on motifs and figuring out what materials will be most suitable," she said, "but fascinating as designing is, painting is still my most absorbing interest. Some day, when I find the time, I'm going to begin a painting that I hope will be my masterpiece.

"Oh, I'll do it. I budget my minutes so I have much time to devote to my home and my family. I've discovered I can always find spare moments for anything I really want to do. It's a matter of management."

And it would seem, judging from the success she has already achieved, she has managed rather well.

Glass Blowers Exhibit Fast-Disappearing Art

By Virginia Lee Warren.

WHEN CABLES flashed the news recently that a French dressmaker had actually made dresses of spun glass, most of the world considered the feat distinctly novel. But to two Americans, Frank J. Burke and Hasting R. Cross, the feat was an old, old story. For almost 27 years they have traveled all over the world with a spun glass dress made by themselves.

The object of the travels was to give glass-blowing exhibitions. Mr. Burke and Mr. Cross are almost as rare as their spun glass dress. They are among the six or seven in the United States today who can blow glass free-hand.

"Yes, there's only a handful of us left," said Mr. Burke yesterday. "Once there were thousands in this country. Machines have taken the place of men in the glass industry."

There was no bitterness in his voice as he told of the coming of the machines. Most of the glass-blowers have found work in other fields. Mr. Burke and Mr. Cross have had a happy time traveling and exhibiting their fast-disappearing art.

Showing Famous Dress.

This week they are giving exhibitions and are showing the famous glass dress, a luscious pink affair, in the glassware department of the Palais Royal. They were surrounded yesterday noon by women, early arrivals at the Palais Royal's cooking school which will continue through today and tomorrow. There were a few men in the audience, too, and the interest they displayed in the spun-glass dress matched that of the women.

"Some day it will be in the Metropolitan Museum," said Mr. Burke. "We've been offered $2,400 for it, but we're not quite ready to let the museum have it yet. Only one other museum in the world has a glass dress. That's the one in Madrid. When the Infanta Eulalie visited this country in 1893 she attended the World's Fair in Chicago and wore a spun-glass dress to a ball at the Palmer House. Later she gave the gown to the museum in Madrid. It created a tremendous sensation when she wore it in this country."

It took two years to weave the pink dress after Mr. Burke and Mr. Cross had spun the glass for it.

"But, of course, we didn't work at it steadily," explained Mr. Cross, as he held a long stick of glass over a blue flame. When one end of the glass had become red with heat he blew on the other end. The small, red blob expanded gently into a thin, white, transparent ball.

"It takes a long time to learn how to do that," smiled Mr. Burke approvingly in the direction of Mr. Cross. "A good many men can blow glass into a mold. A few small factories still use that system. It assures every piece being uniform. But when a person blows glass in the air he's bound to have a slight difference in each piece. I guess he puts a little bit of himself in every one."

Served Long Apprenticeships.

Both men had long apprenticeships before they attained the rank of blower. Mr. Burke was only 16 when he entered the famous Sandwich Glass Works on Cape Cod. Mr. Cross began his apprenticeship 35 years ago in Kansas City.

As a result of the time he spent in front of the white-hot furnaces at Sandwich, Mr. Burke is blind in one eye.

"A glass-blower's cataract," he explained.

In the days when these two men learned their trade it was customary for the blowers to use their spare minutes following lunch or a rest period in trying to master fancy glass blowing.

"We were interested in the fine glassware being blown in Europe, especially in Venice, and we tried to imitate it," Mr. Burke said. "We did pretty well, too. But now the men have no chance to develop new forms. If they are caught blowing a fancy piece in the factory it is taken away from them and they are forbidden to use the factory's materials or equipment for such doings. So I guess we'll never catch up with the Venetians. They still hold the secret for blowing gold flecks into glass."

Both Mr. Burke and Mr. Cross see no reason why spun glass dresses shouldn't enjoy a vogue.

"But I hope they'll be in pink or green or blue or some other color. I don't like to think of our ladies running around in transparent dresses," twinkled Mr. Burke.

U. S. Women Real Companions Of Husbands, French Writer Says

By Andre Vulliet
(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

PARIS, Oct. 9.—"More seldom than in France and for reasons in which American men have probably a large share of responsibility, American women are real companions and associates of their husbands," in the opinion of the French writer, Gilbert Chinard.

Writing in the paper Le Temps, Chinard contends that, as the result of a sort of chivalrous ideal, men try to spare their wives the contact with realities and the struggle for life. On the other hand, he continues, American women, more than their European sisters, boss the home completely and will rarely put their husbands au courant of their domestic troubles.

Chinard admits there are exceptions in middle classes and among young couples.

"But," he says, "if prosperity comes in and if the husband's business expands, the association between the two is broken loose and husband and wife rapidly lead independent lives."

Depression Strengthens Ties.

Depression, contrary to economists' anticipations, has had at least the happy result of bringing men and women closer together than in prosperity times, the French writer asserts.

Speaking of American women's activity, he finds that "even more than men, they seem to have an inclination for meetings, associations, great projects, social enterprises and even almost revolutionary reforms."

This, he thinks, can be traced back to the time when American pioneer women had all the responsibility for keeping the home and organizing the frame in which the social life of the country and its traditions would be inserted.

Unhappy Results Noted.

"Hence," the author writes, "American women's apparently contradictory tastes, both for tradition and for reform.

"That strong inclination for reform that lingers in the heart of every American woman finds its most propitious field in children's education, where it brings about, too often, unhappy results."

"Education must be 'progressive,'" Chinard continues, "* * * and American women often fall unconsciously victims to so-called professional experts on children's pedagogy and psychology, whose rich imagination is always ready to invent something new."

This BUSINESS of LIVING

When Girl Is Evasive, How Can Youth Learn if She Likes Him?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Is there any way of telling when a girl really likes a fellow and when she is just playing him for a sucker, for the money he spends on her and the places he takes her?

That's my problem. There's a girl I'm crazy about, and I've been giving her a rush for nearly six months. She lets me date her constantly, but remains as cool as a cucumber so far as any display of affections is concerned.

* * * *

Occasionally she lets me put my arm around her, if we're driving home of an evening; but she always manages to slip away without kissing me goodnight. I've both asked her to kiss me and tried to do so. She laughs it off or gets out of it some way. Several times I've left her so angry that I swore I'd never call her again. But before the sun goes down the next day, I always call her up, even against my own will. She has no other fellow that I know of, and we have about four dates a week on an average.

* * * *

Both of us are 21, and I am convinced I'm deeply in love with her. But how she feels about me I don't know. What do you think of the whole affair? Do you think I should try to forget her, since she's so cool and noncommittal?

DISGUSTED.

Advice to a Suitor.

DEAR DISGUSTED: By simply curtailing your expenditures in the girl's regard; by taking her to fewer and less expensive places; by cutting down on your donations of candy, flowers, gifts—or whatever expression of affection your fancy and generosity has dictated in the past—and then observing her reaction, I should think you could promptly learn whether the girl was commercially rather than emotionally interested in you.

* * * *

Because this particular girl is noncommittal in her attitude toward you doesn't necessarily mean she is a calculating golddigger. As a matter of fact, the more accomplished the golddigger, the more artfully artless she is as a rule in feigning a warmth she doesn't possess.

She may have been hurt in a previous love affair, and have brought to this one a determination to protect her feelings by not wearing them on her sleeve. Or she may be a reserved, fastidious young woman who intuitively shrinks from any suggestion of lightness in love. Perhaps she likes you a great deal without being at all sure she loves you, and is saving her kisses for the man she ..o doubt hopes one day to marry.

* * * *

Remembering that "faint heart ne'er won fair lady," I think you had best let your own feelings dictate your course of action. Make up your mind to win her love. Don't give up just because you don't understand her. Lots of women have married men they dearly loved, yet managed to keep them guessing 'til the end of life, as to what they were feeling and thinking. This girl may belong to that school of enchantresses. M. H.

Attention! "Forlorn."

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I wish to take this opportunity of thanking you for your prompt and valued column reply to my letter of two weeks ago, and at the same time reply to the person whose letter appeared in Monday's column, signed "Forlorn." I should like to become acquainted with the writer. Perhaps you can suggest the method of procedure? Thank you, and may God bless you. Sincerely yours,

JUST LONELY.

* * * *

DEAR JUST LONELY: I am printing your letter in the hope that "Forlorn," who has expressed a wish to know you, will provide me with an address or telephone number. If so, I shall be glad to communicate it to you.

M. H.

Convert to Column.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: For the past 20 years I have read "Advice Columns" and I must confess I believe they were mostly concocted in the fertile imaginations of the columnists. My letter to you was my first letter to a stranger, for I have never written a single fan letter—much as I've been tempted when I admired some fine action in a publicized person. I thank you and The Washington Post.

The letter published from "Appreciative Reader" warmed my heart. IMPOSSIBLE.

* * * *

DEAR IMPOSSIBLE: For the foregoing excerpts, as well as for all else you said in your splendid letter of acknowledgement, I thank you most sincerely. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write to her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Marine Exit Pleased Haiti.

When the citizens of Haiti said farewell to the United States Marines at the end of their occupation of the republic, the only regret was for the cessation of money spent by the marines. According to Seymour Pradel, Haitian senator, there was national happiness among his people when the men were withdrawn.

Job 'Very Exciting,' Says Woman Delegate

Post Staff Photo.

A McGill University graduate who went looking for a job, and found it in aviation, is Miss Hyacinthe Lambart, of Ottawa, Canada, only woman delegate to the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

Miss Hyacinthe Lambart, Representing Canada at Air Congress, Sees Great Future for Sex in Aviation.

HER GRAY SUIT contrasting with the more feminine costumes worn by the women who have "just come" with their noted husbands, Hyacinthe Lambart, of Canada, and only woman delegate to the Federation Aeronautique Internationale, is a distinguished figure at the meetings of the federation.

"And although I find it all very exciting and a little frightening, I am not nearly so tremulous as I was when I first went to the convention at The Hague two years ago," she confided yesterday in her suite at the Mayflower.

Tall, with serene gray eyes, and light brown hair which she wears long, Miss Lambart combines a gracious frinedliness with an admirable efficiency, feminine charm with masculine independence. Although her face is some what grave in response, her eyes light up when she talks of her work, and her smile is infectious.

"I was especially frightened at that convention at The Hague when I found that I was not only the first woman delegate who had ever attended it," she said, "but the only delegate from a British dominion."

"But everyone was so nice to me, especially the Princess Bibesco, whose husband is president of the federation, that I soon felt at home. And the men didn't seem to think it at all strange that I should be a delegate, so I suppose it was all right.

"And certainly I see no reason why women should not be delegates to the convention, they are interested in aviation, and are doing outstanding work in it."

Until she was graduated from McGill University four years ago Miss Lambart had never taken any especial interest in flying.

"Of course I was interested, just as everyone is," she said, "but I had never considered making it my career. But now I would not give up my work for anything. I honestly believe there is a great future for women in aviation. Perhaps not in the flying end of it, but in the technical ground work, which seems to me even more important than the flying. I think the passengers are most interested in that."

Miss Lambert, who is assistant secretary of the Canadian Flying Clubs Association, is especially enthusiastic about the magazine, Canadian Aviation, which is published by the association.

"We use this magazine to awaken the interest of the Canadian people in flying," she said.

"The clippings which we collect show that more and more people are flying, not only for business trips, but for pleasure. In our magazine which is published every month, we show maps, and map out airplane tours. These tours are becoming more and more popular."

Although she is a licensed pilot Miss Lambert finds little time for flying, her work in the office keeping her busy most of the time. But on all her previous trips to this country, as well as on this one, she has flown. Last year she flew down to Roosevelt Field, but this is the first time she has ever circled the city of Washington in her plane.

Solomon Not Author Says 'Gloomy Dean'

Inge's Opinion Supported by Museum Official.

WHO WROTE the Song of Solomon? Certainly Solomon was not the author, according to Dean Inge of St. Paul's.

After the dean declared at a church conference in Birmingham, England, recently that "the reputed author had nothing to do with the 'Song of Solomon'," several English editors decided to look into the matter.

Some of them found at the beginning of that particular part of the Old Testament the following:

"'The Song of Songs,' which is Solomon's."

That was enough for them. They were content to let the matter rest there, convinced the dean was mistaken.

One editor was not so easily satisfied. He discovered after interviewing learned religious leagues and societies that no one knows the answer to the question.

An official at the British Museum said:

"It is now generally believed that Solomon was not the author, but no one knows who was. It is believed the song is just a collection of love lyrics."

Beauty Hints Of Film Stars Are Disclosed

Betty Furness Drinks Plenty of Water for Dry Skin.

By Frances Mangum.

ALL women want to be beautiful. Some women have to be. Cinema stars, for instance. The glamorous ladies of the screen realize that if the grocer is to be paid they must first of all insure their comeliness. As a result they have more beauty theories and beauty methods, possibly, than any women in the world.

Few among them that can't quote beauty formulas as easily as housewives recite recipes.

Betty Furness says it is simple and inexpensive to overcome a dry skin condition. Drink water, glasses of it every day and you will be surprised at the rapid improvement.

Slices of lemon applied to the face and then a warm towel put on top of the lemon is a perfect bleach for tender skin, says Ginger Rogers.

Advice for Lustrous Hair.

To those who crave lustrous hair but "shy" brushing for fear it will disturb the set wave, Irene Dunne offers this advice: By all means brush the hair, for that alone can give it that desirable luster, but do it layer by layer. While brushing the lower layer with the right hand hold the top layer aside with the left. But be sure to start with the top layer, she cautions.

Perfume plays a vital part in stamping a personality in the minds of other people, according to Virginia Bruce. She puts a drop of her favorite fragrance on her eyebrows, her lips and the lobes of her ears.

Ann Harding believes a woman is as old as her walk. She says too many young women fail to look young because of their shuffling, awkward gait. Cultivate a springing, erect pace, she advises, and you will not only look younger, but feel younger, too.

Value of Dark Glasses.

Most of us have learned the value of dark glasses as protection from summer sun. Few have learned their value as protection from wind. Anne Shirley makes this suggestion particularly for those who ride in rumble seats in windy fall weather.

She finds these glasses invaluable to avoid the red-eyed uncomfortable feeling of "sand in the eyes," which is a direct result of wind exposure.

Dorothy Lee has an old-fashioned rain barrel in the yard of her Santa Monica home. She insists there is nothing that keeps the skin and hair as soft as washing with rain water.

Expert Makes Old Fur Coats Appear New

Capital Shop Featuring the Russian Influence in Clothes.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

EVEN IN THE midst of this balmy weather comes a breeze with a nip to it that reminds us fur coat season is only a step away. And what a sad story that is to some. With hesitant hands they pull last winter's coat from the closet hoping hard that it will do for just one more year.

One look at it might seem discouraging, but there's a fur coat doctor in town who can patch up torn sleeves, heal ragged linings and do such an all-around good job of remaking old coats that it's difficult to tell them from new.

The gentleman has a knack. And it takes a knack and plenty of good taste to renovate some of the old coats which have been in hiding all summer. One customer looked her old sealskin over and decided it was no more good to her. But when she balanced her budget she changed her mind and decided she'd take a long chance and see what could be done.

The fur coat doctor inspected the skins. He surveyed the style, and he told her if he did just this or that to it she'd have a fine coat. She was skeptical, but she agreed, and he set to work.

You should see that coat. He put in a few new skins. He put on a new collar—and such a collar! He lengthened it. And he changed its loose nonfitting style to the swaggerest set-up you ever saw. Inasmuch as he designed it from an advance style he made a new coat that will be as good next year as it is this. Furthermore, he said with a patch here and there, and a few changes now and then there'll be ten years' wear in the old coat yet!

So—the moral is—if you've got a coat that looks too run down for anything, take it to the fur coat doctor and see what can be done! He also specializes in making over cloth coats and can give you no end of advice about smart fur collars and cuffs.

• • • •

The Russian Influence.

Thank goodness for a style that becomes most everyone. In other words, huzza for the Russian influence in clothes! Few women don the chic cossack hats who don't actually beam at themselves in the mirror. And still fewer wear the Russian coats that don't wonder why they never did before.

Both hats and coats typically Russian are featured now in a local shop. The coats are black, trimmed luxuriously and abundantly with Persian lamb, with a little row of cartridge pleats around the waist.

• • • •

Metallic Season.

Further proof of a metallic season may be found on the counters of a large store. Here in the midst of much gay jewelry, tiaras, bracelets, necklaces and earrings are gold and silver mesh collars that fasten cowl-like high around the neck and hang in loose folds. Belts and bags to match offer an opoprtunity for a very swank ensemble.

• • • •

An Inexpensive Hair Brush.

Sooner or later it comes to everyone—that desire to cultivate a lovely head of hair. If they see a specialist he'll tell them, "Madam, brush your hair religiously. Brush it every day! The more you brush it the healthier your scalp, the healthier your scalp the thicker, more lustrous your hair!" So inspired, they put aside the old brush for a new one, or at least they look around for a new one. But my, the high cost of good brushes!

Just how this little brush which costs only 89 cents happened to get on the market for such a modest sum is a mystery. It's one of the handiest little hair weapons yet. Five rows of genuine pig bristles are placed in irregular heights so that during the brushing they separate the strands of hair and go right down to the scalp. This arrangement is also ideal for brushing waves as it in no way brushes them out, but keeps them loose and lovely.

The back is pierced by small open strips so that it may be easily cleansed and is therefore more sanitary than some brushes. Washing it does not impair the strength of the bristles but leaves them as effective as before.

• • • •

Triple Mirrors Available.

Large triple mirrors to grace the top of a dressing table and chiffonier are available now in a local store. There are many women who for lack of space prefer a dressing shelf in the bathroom. One of these mirrors would suit this ideally.

The two side mirrors are on hinges so that they can swing outward and by a method of counter reflections enable one to obtain a splendid side and even back view.

The mirrors come in two types, ivory or maple frames, and they cost only $1.95.

• • • •

Make-Up Box at Bargain.

One way to keep the dressing table tidy is by means of a make-up box. There are some of these selling for 50 cents in a downtown store. The top has a flower or scenic picture on the outside and a large mirror.

A Good Fit Is Assured In Dress on Slim Lines

Pattern No. 811.

HERE IS A USEFUL and wearable dress. The bias front of the blouse drapes becomingly. It is held by a tie or by knotted ends pulled through a slash. The straight skirt has an inverted pleat at the center-front, darts at the back waistline. These two details insure slim lines, good fit and plenty of "walking room." The long sleeves are tucked—an interesting touch that is simple to achieve.

This design may be made of a dressy silk for afternoon wear, with a bright contrast achieved in the bow. Or it may be of a tailored crepe for a not-too-severe business frock. The pattern is cut in sizes 14 to 42. Yardage requirements are on the envelope.

Give and Take.

The play of many hands can be likened to a rough and tumble fight. Both sides take turns at giving and taking, and the side which gives the most and is forced to take the least eventually wins out. As in a free-for-all, science sometimes gives away to impulse. Both teams try to keep their wits about them, but sometimes in the excitement and heat of the moment they lose control.

In today's hand both the defense and the Declarer made a series of brilliant plays. The defense finally weakened, however, and made the first slip, which enabled the Declarer to fulfill his contract.

Against the three-notrump contract West opened his fourth best diamond. The East player was faced with a problem almost immediately. He could come up with the Ace and return the Queen of the suit; he could play the Queen and thus probably prevent a hold-up by the Declarer in case the latter had the King and no intermediates; or he could go up with the Ace and shift. After some thought, East very brilliantly decided, despite the fact that his partner had led the suit, to play the Declarer for some sort of double stopper in it. He accordingly went up with the diamond Ace and shifted to the heart Ten.

South was equal to the occasion. Without any hesitation, he went up with the Ace, thus giving the East player the impression that he had the Ace and King and did not fear the suit. Then he led the Queen of spades from his own hand and West covered with the King. The King, however, was allowed to hold the trick. South knew he had to concede two spade tricks to the opponents and he preferred West's winning the first one so that his own diamond and heart combinations could not be led through. West, after being allowed to hold the trick with the spade King, was in something of a quandary concerning what to lead, but, marking the Declarer with the heart Queen on the bidding and also with some very sound diamond combination, he made his best continuation—another spade. South, very cleverly, again refused to go up with the Ace, deciding to lose his second spade trick immediately. He reasoned that if he went up with the spade Ace and then led another spade, East would win the trick, and West, now being able to discard, would indicate which red suit should be played by discarding a card in the other suit.

At any rate, East won the trick with the spade Ten, and now had to make his final decision. On the first heart lead, when the Ten had been led and South had gone up with the Ace, West had discarded the four-spot, fearing that to throw the eight might sacrifice a potential trick, since South had bid the suit. In addition, South's play of the heart Ace without any hold-up or finesse had completely fooled East and the latter therefore decided to shift back to diamonds as his last hope. He led the Queen and South now had the rest of the tricks, making four-odd.

South's line of play was praiseworthy from start to finish, the play of the heart Ace and the manner of playing the spade suit being the main features. East's shift at trick 2 was admirable, as was West's spade continuation after being allowed to hold the King, but West's slight slip in failing to signal with the heart 8, and thus aiding South in fooling East, marked the undoing of the defense.

Children Demand Animal Crackers

POLICEMEN, automobiles and trucks make exciting toys, but as cookies they hold slight allure for the boys and girls who gobble up animal crackers. A youngster may eat a cookie automobile once or twice and he may nibble on a cookie policeman just for a change, but for a steady diet he wants camels, lions, elephants, giraffes and all the rest of the menagerie.

This fact was learned recently when manufacturers of the crackers on the West Coast checked their sales. One company had tried to popularize a line of cookies that included airplanes and automobiles. But these were left on the shelf while the children continued a run on wild animals. Another company reported it occasionally slipped a rooster or a duck among the lions and tigers. But not often. The boys and girls prefer that wild game flavor.

Capital Kitchen

By Susan Mills.

ONIONS are no weeping matter if you know how to prepare and cook them. In the matter of preparation hold them under running water while peeling and your eyes won't smart.

Here are onion recipes that will make the family cry—for more.

Cream of Onion Soup.

2 tablespoons rice
2 medium-sized onions
2 tablespoons cooking oil
1 cup water
1 teaspoon meat extract or a bouillon cube
3 cups milk
Salt and pepper

Chop the onions and cook in the oil until slightly yellow. Add the water, rice and meat extract or bouillon cube and cook until the rice and onions are tender. Add the milk, reheat and season with salt and pepper. This makes four servings; it will be found that the rice much improves this soup.

Baked Rice Milanaise.

1 cup rice
¼ teaspoon paprika
2 tablespoons minced onion
2 cups tomato sauce
2 hard cooked eggs
1 minced green pepper
2-3 cup grated cheese.

Wash the rice and cook until tender in rapidly boiling salted water. Drain thoroughly and add one-half cupful of the grated cheese and the paprika. Meanwhile, cook the onion and green pepper in about four tablespoons of cooking oil, add these to the rice and cheese mixture, and either serve with the tomato sauce, the eggs, sliced, and the ramaining cheese, or turn into a casserole, sprinkle the remainder of the grated cheese over the top, bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 15 minutes. Garnish with the eggs and serve with tomato sauce. Six servings.

Onion-Citrus Salad.

Slice large, mild onions into thin slices and separate into rings. Slice peeled oranges. Mix onion, orange and grapefruit segments and marinate well with a good French dressing.

Pimiento Onion Sandwiches.

½ cup (2 oz.) dried beef.
2 hard cooked eggs.
1 can pimientos.
1 sliced onion.
Salad dressing.

Cut the beef in shreds with scissors. Chop the eggs, pimientos, and onion. Add the beef and enough salad dressing to make a paste. Spread on lightly buttered slices of whole wheat or white bread. Eight sandwiches.

How to Keep Well

Epidemic Meningitis.

IN 1811 Elisha North, a prominent physician of New London, Conn., published an essay on "Spotted Fever." It was a remarkable description of a disease that had been occurring in epidemic form in the New England States, spreading terror to the inhabitants. Children particularly were affected, although adults were not immune. The condition is now known as cerebrospinal, meningitis or cerebrospinal fever.

There seems to be adequate evidence that the disease is always present in practically every community. That it does not become manifest is because the causative organism lacks virulence or the resistance of individuals is high. The disease frequently appears in crowded, insanitary surroundings.

The causative organism is a double, biscuit shaped bacterium. It has a special affinity for the coverings of the brain, sometimes affecting the brain itself. The disease is probably spread by secretions from the nose, mouth and throat of infected persons, and during an epidemic the wearing of gauze masks is advised for those coming into contact with known cases.

At first there is an acute infection of the nose and throat, simulating a cold. From this area the organisms find their way into the blood and finally set up inflammation in the membranes that cover the brain and, sometimes, in the joints, the heart, and the lungs. The temperature at first is not very high, usually about 101 degrees F. The pulse is rapid and slight chills are frequent. The patient complains of being sore all over.

Up to this point the symptoms are not so different from those displayed by influenza or the grip. When the rash appears the diagnosis may be made with reasonable certainty. The skin eruptions vary in size from tiny pinpoint spots to irregular blotches a half inch or more in diameter. The rash usually fades within three or four days.

If the case is severe, brain symptoms will usually appear. There is first a splitting headache and then vomiting and stiffness of the neck.

Fortunately a serum has been discovered that will neutralize the poison of the disease. This should be given as soon as the diagnosis is made. Because the organism appears in the blood stream as well as in the coverings of the brain the serum should be injected into the circulation and into the spinal canal. Sometimes intravenous injection only is required. As is the rule in diptheria, enough antitoxin must be given to completely neutralize the poison.

Planes Defy Rains In Far-Off Kashmir

For 50 years all attempts to link Kashmir with the rest of India have failed. Engineers found it impossible to construct railways over and through the mountains. The road, which has high mountains on one side and a river on the other, is impassable during the rainy season.

But now the Maharajah has bought a fleet of airplanes. Rainy season or no rainy season, he will be able to visit different parts of the beautiful state.

Searing Fails To Keep Roast From Drying

Time and Effort Saved by Thorough Cooking Before Turning.

Great advancement in methods of cookery has been made in the past quarter century. One of the time-old theories is exploded in the following article by Ruth Chambers. It is typical of the new ideas she will present at The Post Cooking School in Washington Auditorium, October 16, 17, 18 and 19.

By Ruth Chambers.

WHEN GRANDMOTHER cooked a roast, she first seared it "to keep in the juices." She would have thought herself most negligent if she didn't baste it at frequent intervals. To keep it from "drying out," she finished the cooking in a covered pan. Her oven must be very hot, she thought, to cook the meat as rapidly as possible.

Her granddaughter may put a roast into a cool oven if it suits her convenience and know that the meat will not be injured in food value or flavor by this method. She will cook it at a lower and more even temperature for a longer period of time if she is up-to-date in her cooking methods. Moreover, she cooks it uncovered, unless it is a roast of veal. Instead of basting her roast, she places the meat in the oven with the fat side up so that the fat itself as it melts will serve as basting.

Careful tests in laboratories of universities and colleges, cooperating with the U. S. Department of Agriculture have shown that searing does not keep in the juices nor prevent a roast from drying. It does give the surface a pleasing brown appearance and for that reason many cooks prefer to sear a roast. The searing may be done either at the beginning or the end of the cooking time.

A roast cooked at a high temperature shrinks more than one cooked more slowly. Therefore newer recipes call for longer cooking time. A covered roast shrinks more than one uncovered.

In broiling, time and effort are saved if the meat is cooked thoroughly first on one side, then the other, with only one turning.

With this newer knowledge, the housewife of today is able to cook many different cuts of meat to make them most palatable and to bring out their high food value. She may seem a heretic in the light of old traditions but she has definite reasons for what she does.

Hospital Bed Shortage.

The shortage of hospital beds is the reason New York City showed less improvement than the country as a whole in the control of tuberculosis last year. That is the opinion of Dr. Godias J. Drolet, statistician of the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association. He declares there is a shortage of 2,500 hospital beds in Manhattan.

What Today Means

"Libra."

IF October 10 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 2 to 4 p. m. and from 7 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 6 to 8 a. m., 5 to 7 p. m. and 10 p. m. until midnight.

If you wish to be successful in your undertakings, on this October 10, regardless of your inclination to feel otherwise, force yourself into an optimistic frame of mind.

Accuracy is vitally important in any statements made or issued regarding finances, as verifications might be made that would make errors appear as if they were intentionally made. There is danger that a dispute might arise through the loss of temper, so be on your guard.

If you attend a social affair be careful you do not commit a breach of etiquette, by unintentionally expressing an unfavorable opinion of a great person related to one of the other guests. Married couples, as well as those either already engaged or on the verge of being so, will find sarcastic comments apt to cause quarrels on this date, so the wise will curb any tendency in this direction.

If a woman and October 10 is your birthday, your love for music will be reflected in your life, for there should be a great influence for harmony working, which may bring much happiness.

The child born on October 10 generally, when it reaches its teens, requires a tendency to be aggressive. This child should have plenty of "ginger and pep," and be a leader in social and school activities.

If a man and October 10 is your birthday, your appreciation for beautiful things will play an important part in your life and may help you in the right direction. The amount of energetic determination you possess should enable you to see your ambitions realized. Your versatility should enable you to gain recognition in one of many fields of activity.

THE MAN WITHOUT NERVES

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

THERE was not the slightest doubt that Sandywayes misbehaved that night. Anthony had pressed a £5 note into the hand of Amos Grindley, village tailor and captain of the local Artisans Golf Club, which had a small course on the other side of the village, begging fervently that not one of the members should go to bed thirsty.

Pauline led the limping hero of the occasion away with her, down the long rose-covered pergola toward the squash court and swimming pool.

"You are glad?" she whispered.

"That depends," he answered.

"On what?"

"On your answer to my next question."

"Ask it then," she invited.

"I am a very rough Colonial with decent antecedents and enough money," he announced. "Will you marry me?"

"Why?" she asked, with a little quiver at her lips.

For a moment he lost his poise. Then his arms went around her and he grinned.

"Because you're the only girl I've ever looked at twice, and because I love you," he said.

"I'll tell you in the summer house," she ahswered demurely.

Guests for Dinner.

A dinner was planned that evening at the Sarson home and a pleasant touch was given to the party by the sudden arrival of Milhaven in his long racing car. He made his way in among the little group, with his usual lazy but delightful smile and friendly gleam in his eyes.

"I have come," he said, as he greeted Timothy Sarson, "to offer you all my congratulations, to shake hands with the hero of the occasion, and I trust," he added, "to drink one of those marvelous-looking champagne cocktails."

Tyssen and Pauline hurried forward in obedience to an imperative gesture from the latter's father.

"They tell me that you played marvelous golf, Mr. Tyssen," Lord Milhaven said, holding out his hand. "Milhaven, my name is; from the Court here. If I'd known what was happening, you may be sure that I'd have been on the spot. As it is, I have come to drink a cocktail with you and to thank you for your valiant effort. I am still one of the directors of the Paradise Club, although I don't come down very often nowadays."

"Very kind of you, Lord Milhaven," Tyssen said. "I had a good deal of luck with my putts but I enjoyed my game."

"Tell me where you learned your golf?" Milhaven asked politely.

Tyssen shook his head.

"That's a very unimportant secret," he said. "Anyhow, I've been happy to help the Paradise Club. I have spent some exceedingly pleasant days in the neighborhood.

Hulit Approaches.

Milhaven set down his glass.

"Ah, here comes my friend, Mr. Huitt. Poor fellow! We will avoid the subject before him, unless he alludes to it himself, but I am afraid that he has had another of those grim hours at the coroner's court this afternoon."

Mr. Huitt in his well-brushed dinner clothes, his glossy white shirt and neatly arranged cravat, walked across the lawn in his usual stiff and precise fashion. He shook hands with Pauline and with his host. Then he turned to Milhaven.

"It appears that while you and I were grubbing in the city, Huitt," the latter said, "marvelous exploits were being performed here."

"So I understand," Mr. Huitt observed, with a formal nod to Tyssen. "Congratulations, sir. I was fortunate enough to see your last drive and putt. They reminded me——"

He paused. Tyssen stood as though expecting him to finish his sentence.

"Yes?"

"Of a freer school of golf than we have here," the other concluded.

"I asked Mr. Tyssen," Milhaven remarked, "where he learned his golf. For some reason or other, he prefers to keep the matter a secret. Why not tell us, Mr. Tyssen?"

Surprise Visit.

"Next week—with pleasure," the young man promised.

"So soon as that?" Milhaven queried carelessly.

"Perhaps even before."

Groves came out to announce the service of dinner. Timothy Sarson turned to Milhaven, who was finishing his cocktail.

"If you are alone, Lord Milhaven," he suggested, "you would not like to squeeze in with us, I suppose?"

"Nothing I should like better," was the prompt acquiescence. "I am absolutely alone tonight, as it happens, and I should like to see more of your friend who they say can do everything with a golf ball except swallow it. Miss Sarson will excuse my costume?"

"Of course," she answered. "Half of us are not changed. Groves, one more place, please, on my right."

"I must not turn out the hero of the hour," Milhaven begged.

Pauline smiled.

"You won't," she confided. "He is sitting on my other side."

It was in the midst of dinner that Pauline pointed out two shadowy forms crossing the lawn.

"Who on earth are those men?" she exclaimed.

"Look like policemen," somebody observed.

"Hello, there!" Anthony called out, advancing to the open window. "What do you fellows want?"

"Sorry to have to disturb any one," the inspector said, saluting. "Is there a young gentleman here passing under the name of Christopher Tyssen?"

Under Arrest.

Tyssen stood up at once.

"There is," he admitted. "What do you want?"

The inspector glanced at the paper he was carrying.

"You need not answer my question unless you like," he continued, "but we have information that your correct name is Christopher Anstruther Sandford and that you come from Sydney, New South Wales."

"Quite right," Tyssen acknowledged. "What of it?"

"What do you want with me?" he asked.

The inspector produced a very official-looking paper.

"Sorry, sir," he announced, "but we have here a warrant for your arrest."

"What for?" Tyssen demanded in genuine astonishment. "I have done nothing against the law that I know of."

"We will explain it to you later, if you will come along with us," the inspector said. "It might, perhaps, be less of a shock to your friends," he added, in a lower tone, "if we kept the nature of the charge to ourselves."

"Don't be absurd," Tyssen scoffed. "You don't get me out of here until you tell me what that paper stands for and what you want me for."

"We want you," the inspector confided gravely, "on the charge of having, on the night of the 19th of July, willfully murdered Sir Julian Bott."

Tyssen laughed scornfully.

"Rubbish," he exclaimed.

"I must ask you to take this a little more seriously, sir," the inspector insisted. "Here is the warrant, and it is also my duty to tell you that anything you now say may be used against you in evidence. You had better come quietly with us; then, if you wish to make a statement, the inspector in charge will take it."

"Where are you taking me?"

"Lewes Gaol."

There was an instant's silence in the room, broken first by Milhaven's hasty, unformed sentence.

"Christopher Sandford — the boy wonder! Sent from school to Sydney at 16 years old to play in the Australian golf championship. Won it easily, too."

Milhaven, who had risen from his place, came down the room. For once, he had lost his habitual languid drawl.

"Inspector," he intervened, "I am a magistrate for this county. Will you be so kind as to let me see the warrant?"

"Certainly, sir," the man assented.

Milhaven glanced it through and handed it back. He was looking puzzled but grave.

"The warrant is all right," he admitted. "Of course, we all know that it is ridiculous, but I am afraid that you will have to go with them. One moment first, though. Do you mind telling me whether your father was James Anstruther Sandford, who virtually owned the Second National Bank in Sydney?"

"He was. What's that got to do with it?"

In Father's Debt.

Milhaven smiled. In the clear but softened light of the room, a strange expression seemed to linger for a moment upon his face.

"Nothing much," he answered. "Nothing of any particular consequence. I am not sure, though. My memory may be somewhat at fault, but—I believe that I still owe your father a trifle."

"I don't see that it is of any particular consequence just now," Tyssen remarked, with a note of impatience in his tone.

"Perhaps you don't," Milhaven agreed smoothly. "By the by, would you like anyone to come with you?"

"Not likely," Tyssen replied. "Unless," he added, with rather a strained smile, "Mr. Huitt cared to come."

Huitt's eyes glittered for a moment behind the lenses of his spectacles.

"I could be of no possible service," he said stiffly, "I know nothing of your antecedents. As a matter of fact, it is somewhat of a shock to me to hear that you have ventured to open an account with my bank under an assumed name."

"No one is allowed to accompany the prisoner," the inspector announced. "Will you come this way please, sir."

Off to Gaol.

He laid his hand upon Tyssen's shoulder. The latter looked around.

"I am awfully sorry, Miss Pauline and Mr. Sarson, but it is not my fault that I am forced to leave you like this. The whole thing is ridiculous, of course. I never saw or heard anything of Julian Bott in my life until after the murder."

Pauline, terribly pale but quite collected, came down the room.

"Christopher," she explained, "please don't believe for a single moment that any one could imagine you guilty of such a horrible thing. I think they are mad."

He held her hand.

"You will please come with us now, sir!" the inspector insisted more sternly.

Tyssen stood for a moment with his fingers locked in Pauline's. Then he stepped through the window.

"Good night, all of you," he called back. "See you tomorrow, I hope. Don't worry, Pauline. This thing will come out as right as rain."

He strode across the lawn between the inspector and the constable. A third man, who had been loitering in the shadows, followed behind. They ushered Tyssen into a large, closed car.

"Lewes Gaol," the inspector instructed the uniformed chauffeur.

Von Sternberg-Dietrich Combine Will Be Dissolved—The Rialto Closes Friday

Noted Partners Are Engaged on Last Film Opus

Director 'Discovered' Star; 'Jayhawker' Fully Cast; Theater Jottings.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

One of the important announcements coming out of Hollywood over the week-end is to the effect that after the completion of "Caprice Espagnole," now in production, the professional alliance of Marlene Dietrich and Director Josef von Sternberg will be dissolved.

This writes finis to a partnership that has been productive of some of the most exciting stories that have emanated from the film colony—both on the screen and off. There probably remains in some memories a vague recollection of a sensational alienation of affections suit, brought by Riza Royce von Sternberg, the director's divorced wife, which finally flattened out and was withdrawn when it was found that her charges could not be substantiated.

More vividly etched in memory, however, are such vehicles for the exotic German star as "The Blue Angel," the German-made picture in which Von Sternberg elevated Dietrich from an obscure place on the Berlin stage to stardom on the screen; "Morocco," "Dishonored" and "The Blonde Venus," omitting for the time being "The Scarlet Empress," yet to be seen in Washington, but probably the most discussed of any of the Von Sternberg-Dietrich joint enterprises.

One Each Without Other.

It is an interesting coincidence that since her emergence as a star of the America cinema Marlene Dietrich has appeared in only one picture not directed by Von Sternberg and that was "Song of Songs," made under the direction of Rouben Mamoulian, while Von Sternberg has only directed one picture in which Frau Dietrich did not appear, "An American Tragedy."

The severance of studio relations is a thoroughly amicable arrangement brought about by the conviction of both parties to the agreement that when "Caprice Espagnole" shall have "completed a series of experiments in a form of cinema not limited to conventionalities of the screen" it will be to the best interests of Frau Dietrich to avail herself of the benefits of varied types of direction and of Von Sternberg to exercise his talents in the direction of a greater number of stars.

That's their story, even if they are stuck with it!

As a convenient method of replying to numerous inquiries already received and forestalling numerous others probably on their way, it seems feasible to state in black-face type that the trio that provides one of the musical interludes between the Fokine ballets, on the stage at Loew's Fox this week, is composed of Max Zinder, violinist; Jules Sims, cellist, and Sylvia Meyer, harpist. Mr. Sims and Miss Meyer are recruited from the personnel of the National Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Hans Kindler. Mr. Zinder, of course, is concertmaster at the Fox.

Prof. Lampkin's orchestra, by the way, is augmented this week by the addition of E. Spitzer, oboe; W. Santucci, bassoon; Miss Meyer, harp, and J. Sevely and J. Nash, violins.

Author Is Coming.

In addition to thinking well of his own play of "The Farmer Takes a Wife," concerning which something may be found elsewhere on this page, Marc Connelly, co-author and director of the Max Gordon production that opened the season at the National last night, is enthusiastic over the possibilities of "Jayhawker," the play in which Henry Hammond, Inc., will present Fred Stone as star in the same theater next week.

"Jayhawker" is the joint work of two unrelated Lewises, Sinclair and Lloyd. Lloyd Lewis is described by Mr. Connelly as a writer with an encyclopedic mind for events and Americana relating to the Civil War period. His biography of Sherman is recognized as one of the best works of its kind extant. Mr. Lewis will be a Washington visitor a little later in the current week.

Cast Is Completed.

It is of interest that the cast for "Jayhawker" now is complete and in rehearsal under the direction of Joe Losey.

In addition to Fred Stone, in the title role; his daughter, Carol, who appears also as his daughter in the play, and Walter C. Kelly, the "Virginia Judge" who will be featured, "Jayhawker" will present the following roster of players: Paul Guilfoyle, Ralph Theadore, Edward McNamara, Walter Baldwin, Edward Acuff, David Andrada, Tom Fadden, Cliff Heckinger, Douglas McMullen, Phillip Minis, Lawrence O. O'Brien, Margaret O'Donnell, Hayes Pryor, Katherine Rolin, Donald Smith, George Oliver Taylor, O. Z. Whitehead and Harry Worth.

So now you know.

Walt Disney, unlike some of the rest of us, doesn't go back on his pals. With the "Silly Symphonies" far outstripping their predecessors, Mickey and Minnie Mouse, in public favor and popularity, their creator has decided to do something about it. So what? So shortly Mickey and Minnie will emerge in all the glory of Technicolor's new three-tone process and be as spectacularly colorful as the "Sillies."

The first two full-length feature subjects to be filmed by the new process are "Becky Sharpe," with Miriam Hopkins and "Peacock's Feathers," starring Ann Harding.

The Children's Theater.

Something was done here yesterday in the way of promising further information concerning the impending season of the Children's Theater of New York at the National Theater in this city. Six plays are to be presented, one a month on Saturday mornings. The line of march shapes up something like this:

"Pocahontas" opens the season on November 3, with a cast of real Indians. Dress, huts, ceremonials—all of the settings and properties, as a matter of fact—will be authentic and historically accurate. This will be followed on December 8 by "Nobody's Girl," translated from the French "En Famille." December 28, Christmas week, will bring the old English legend of "Dick Whittington and His Cat."

Mystery Without Horror.

"The Prince's Secret" is next, an exciting mystery play of the sixteenth century in Spain, but without the horror element, scheduled for February 16. On March 16, another Louisa Alcott play, "Under the Lilacs," will be presented. This is the charming story of a little boy who ran away with a circus. The season will close April 20 with the most thrilling of the Arabian Nights tales, "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp."

The Women's International League, sponsor for the Washington season of the Children's Theater of New York, is now booking season subscriptions at 532 Seventeenth street, phone Metropolitan 3834. It is stressed that a subscription not only insures a permanent seat location, but saves the price of one play.

The Rialto Theater, after a futile effort to engage public interest in a succession of pictures that have fallen something short of an irresistible mass appeal, will close for an indefinite period on Friday of the present week. This is the shortest "season" in the history of the house Tom Moore was proud to call his "Temple of the Muses" before he relinquished it to Universal Pictures on a long-term lease. The Rialto opened on September 13 and will have been in operation exactly four weeks at time of closing. Could there, after all, be something ominous in that number "13"?

Don to Earth Note!

Beginning today, the Earle Theater reverts to four de luxe performances daily, instead of the five that have been given since the "One Night of Love"-Don Bestor combination opened to overflow crowds last Friday.

Despite a four-a-day contract, Don has been agreeable to letting them get the "mosta of the Bestor," as Ben Bernie probably wouldn't say! may withhold their fire a while—provided they mind, of course.

Niece Puts Out Book.

Louis B. Mayer's niece, Ruth Cummings, has long been active as a writer at her uncle's studio, but her first published work, "Song of the Flesh," was put on the stalls this week. It is described as concerning a girl on a billboard—which information, pending reviews or a personal perusal of the volume, will have to suffice. It seems likely the studio may purchase the story, in which case Jean Harlow probably will play in the picture.

Favorites Return To Silver Sheet.

With Walter Byron and Janet Beecher already active as an imaginary Chief Executive of the United States and his First Lady, production on "The President Vanishes" continues apace. Pat O'Malley and Jack Mulhall joined the cast yesterday. Mulhall recently began a comeback in "Belle of the Nineties" and is currently engaged for "Behold My Wife" with Sylvia Sidney.

Glenda to Dig With "Diggers."

Building up a cast for the next edition, "Gold Diggers of 1935," hard-boiled Glenda Farrell will share her wisecracks with a group that already includes Dick Powell, Dorothy Dare, Frank McHugh and Adolphe Menjou. Miss Farrell just finished "Concealment" with Barbara Stanwyck and Warren William.

Foreign Star Coming Out.

Wera Engels, who was imported with a great deal of fanfare by Radio studio, but given small chance to live up to it, will go with Columbia to play in "Call to Arms," which centers in activities around an old soldier's home.

Otherwise One Day.

"Twenty-four Hours" (despite one talkie already by that title), is what Fox is now calling "Twenty-Four Hours a Day," original by Philip MacDonald, who wrote "The Lost Patrol." Gilbert Roland, Mona Barrie and John Halliday are the leading protagonists in the piece, which is about a woman who "risks her life and reputation to save her husband, who is convicted of treason."

Another Musical on the Way.

"Casino de Paree," which will co-star Mr. and Mrs. Al Jolson (Ruby Keeler) is to be Director Archie Mayo's first attempt at a musical film. Another director on the same lot, Frank Borzage, recently devised his first melody movie, "Flirtation Walk."

(Los Angeles Times Syndicate.)

Partnership to Be Dissolved

The report comes out of Hollywood that after her next picture the professional association of Marlene Dietrich and Director Josef von Sternberg will be discontinued. This alliance has been productive of some of the most discussed pictures of recent release. The above likeness of Miss Dietrich was posed by Von Sternberg as a characterization test for their last picture together, "Caprice Espagnole." With its softly shadowed lights, it is a photograph of mood and intellect rather than facial formations.

Straight From the Studios

The Innovation of a Female Philo Vance Is Rumored; Glenda Farrell Will Be a 1935 "Gold Digger;" Intimate Chatter of Celluloid Colony.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Philip K. Scheuer (Pinch-Hitting for Edwin A. Schallert).

Hollywood, Oct. 8.—We have something new in detectives, thanks to the inexplicable ways of filmdom. With William Powell all tied up by contracts, the possibility of his doing any more Philo Vance impersonations grows increasingly remote. Anyway, it appears that Philo doesn't have much to do in the new S. S. Van Dine novel, "The Casino Murder Case," so there is talk around the MGM lot of casting the thing a little differently.

By Nelson B. Bell.

From the simple problems of a simple people, living contentedly in an era when the world was deemed to progress satisfactorily at the break-neck speed of 4 miles an hour, Frank B. Elser and Marc Connelly have concocted a genre comedy that leaves a vivid impression of lusty humor and quaint charm.

In "The Farmer Takes a Wife," with which the season of legitimate drama was inaugurated in the National Theater last evening before a capacity house of typical "first night" brilliance, they have captured the colorful atmosphere of a period in American history that has been strangely ignored in the fashioning of literature of the theater and have sustained it with almost unerring realism.

Only in the second scene of the second act, the cabin of a cargo boat on the Erie Canal, has the sense of actuality been offended by a compartment a trifle too spick-and-span to carry the note of conviction aboard the slow-moving craft that supply the play its major motivation. This single faulty setting is being replaced with a towboat interior that old canalmen might recognize a little more readily as some part of a freighter of the 1850s.

Background of Canal Life.

It is against the background of the Erie Canal and the pride of its people in the part they have played in the opening up of the West that the Messrs. Elser and Connelly have traced their unpretentious love story of a young man who, is a farmer at heart, and a boater by force of circumstances, and an impetuous young woman born and reared a cook along the thriving waterway. The title of the play comprehensively tells the story of their wooing.

The clash of their interests and inclinations forms the central theme of a tale which, unadorned by the wealth of interesting Americana the authors have brought to its embellishment, would not stand as an epic of the grand passion. It is, however, sufficient to thread together hints of the ominous threat of the railroad as main arteries of travel and transportation, the founding of the Vanderbilt dynasty and the awakening of a pioneer country to the imposing destiny that lay only a little way ahead.

"The Farmer Takes a Wife" lays no claim to any epic sweep or grandeur, but there is about it, nevertheless, something of the flavor of those sturdy dramas that have traced the passing of the cattle era in the West, the surrender of sailing ships to steam or the envelopment of mankind's manual labors by the mechanical miracles of an age of dynamos and turbines.

It is, perhaps, this faint outline of the play's deeper significance showing through the loosely woven fabric of its homespun romance that makes the dramatic narrative seem just a little dwarfed by the implications of its environment.

Has Well-Chosen Cast.

The play has been exceptionally well cast and directed, not even the most minor of the characters violating the integrity of a remote era transplanted to the present.

June Walker and Henry Fonda are the young lovers of the canal's floating colony who carry the principal thread of the play's narrative. This they do with fine skill and simplicity. Miss Walker's ingenuous charm at times seems of almost too delicate and gossamer a quality to fit nicely into the rough-and-ready life of the water-front, but these fleeting moments of doubt are immediately dispelled by bursts of temperament and temper when Molly Larkins grows "notional." Mr. Fonda plays the leading male role with disarming naturalness and a rugged honesty of intent and execution that stamp him at once as a happy selection for the responsibilities of leading man.

Comedy Expertly Handled.

The foremost instruments of a robustious brand of comedy are Herb Williams, who ambles through the piece as a former veterinarian, minister of the gospel, dentist and gambler who is not averse to becoming a mule-skinner or promoter as the exigencies of the moment may suggest, and Margaret Hamilton, a tippling cook and gossip of the quays. Mr. Williams was visibly nervous last evening, but contrived in the last act to convert a momentary lapse of memory into one of the comic highlights of the play. The drollest lines in the script have been written into Mr. Williams' part and none lacks for telling delivery. Miss Hamilton is a source of scarcely less merriment.

Among an unusually long cast it would be something less than justice to omit specific acclaim for the fine performances turned in by Gibbs Penrose, as the "menace" in the love story; Ralph Riggs, as the canalman who carried his defiance of the railroads a step too far, and Kate Mayhew, the 'Gammy" Hennessy of the waterfront hotel in which the first and last acts are laid.

Max Gordon has given his production every advantage of painstaking attention to detail and a minutely complete investiture. If faithful adherance to the atmosphere and customs of a distant period in our country's development and a lively humor are to be taken as a basis of appraisal, he has another hit to his credit, despite a slight slowing down midway of its development that will not be difficult to remedy.

Last night's enthusiastic audience rewarded it with many curtain calls following the final curtain.

Church Leader Attacks Movies

Sexy Books and Plays Are Hit Also at Session in Hagerstown.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—The Rev. John H. Ness, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren Church, in 145th annual convention here, in his report today warned of the "danger, even in the church, of losing one's footing if we consume a daily diet of mind-destroying novels, soul-destroying cinema films and drama compounded 50-50 of sex and cynicism."

"There is a prevalent disorder in the souls of men, and little wonder considering the daily menu of the world's life," Dr. Ness said.

The superintendent reported 1,783 accessions to the church the last year and commended for annual conference licenses Paul Horn and Miller Schmuck, York, Pa., and Louis E. Straub, Baltimore.

Bishop G. D. Batdorf, of the Eastern diocese, presided at the communion services today, and the Rev. C. Guy Stambach, Baltimore, at the memorial service.

Tonight, at a musical service, addresses were made by Mrs. George F. Bell, president, Pennsylvania Conference Branch, W. M. A., and the Rev. V. O. Weidler, general secretary, Home Missionary Society.

Police Guns Wound Two In Mill Riot

Factory in Martinsburg, Closed by Strike, Is Scene of Battle.

Tear Gas Used to Clear Way for First Shipment in Month.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Two men were injured when a carlot shipment of products of Interwoven Mills, Inc., which has been closed for a month by a strike, was moved by rail under State police protection from the plant this afternoon, while hundreds of former workers, now on strike, and spectators, watched the procedure.

One tear-gas bomb and one shot from a sawed-off shotgun were used by State police, supplementing a generous use of nightsticks, to keep the crowd away from the tracks when the car was switched to the main line.

State police picked up an American flag, which had been planted by the former workers on the track, and carried it along with the loaded car while they forced the crowd to give way.

Two men were in hospitals this evening with injuries incurred during the trouble. They gave the names of Robert Fizer and C. A. Thompson. Neither was reported seriously hurt.

An estimated dozen extra State policemen were sent here today for use in anticipation of possible trouble during the movement of the car shipment.

The mill attempted during the first week of September, after the strike was called under the hosiery union call, to operate, but found its force so small after a three-day effort that it closed the plant entirely. No conferences looking to a settlement have been held so far.

The plant at peak employed about 1,700 workers, men and women.

Spiking of Owen Precipitates Mob Scene, Erased Only When Landis Asks Player's Removal

Locked Gates Keep Fans From Swarming Onto Playing Field.

By Paul Gollico.

DETROIT, Oct. 3.—The Dizziest, maddest, wildest and most exciting World Series game played in receth years began with a seven-run batting rally in the third inning that gave the Cardinals the championship of the world for 1934, broke into one of the wildest riots ever seen in any ball park in the sixth inning, and wound up, of all things, with the spectators engaging in an old-fashioned pillow fight in which, for half an hour, the populace stood around and hurled seat cushions at one another.

For the first time that I know of, the crowd forced a manager to remove a ball player from the field. Twenty thousand persons massed a-slant in the left-field bleachers turned into a deadly and vicious mob. Only the barrier of a steel screen and locked gates prevented them from pouring into the field and mobbing Outfielder Joe Medwick, of the Cardinals, who bears the incongruous nickname of "Duckey Wucky."

Pounds Out a Triple.

In the sixth inning, with Pepper Martin on second and two out, Medwick hit a triple against the centerfield fence and slid into third base. Marvin Owen stepped on him, but whether by intent or accident, no one could tell. But there was no mistaking Medwick's ideas as he lay on the ground on his back and suddenly began lashing out at Owen's legs with his spiked feet. One-to-three, his feet ashed, and then he kicked with both together, like oe Savoldi.

Then they were at one another, with Bill Klem in the middle. The coaches stepped in. The other players ran over, and what is known as "cooler heads" prevailed, the Cardinals swarmed from the dugout, a red mob, but returned immediately. Klem must have seen provocation for Medwick, for neither man was punished. Medwick held out his hand to Owen, the Tiger third baseman refused it petulantly and returned to his station.

Scores on Single.

Medwick remained on third, and scored on Collins' single. Delancey struck out, ending the inning. The teams changed places on the field, and without the slightest warning, the dangerous storm broke.

Medwick, the No. 7 showing up plainly on his back, began to jog out to his position in left field. In an instant the entire bleacher section was on its feet ind literally blasted him to a standstill with a wave of booing that broke over his head like a comber curling over a lone swimmer. He came closer, and 40,000 arms were lifted against him, waving him back. Then a single apple, a red one, flew from the crowd and rolled at his feet, and Medwick fielded lazily and gracefully, the way an infielder scoops up an easy grounder, and threw it back to the fence. The next moment the air was full of flying fruit, apples, oranges, bananas and beer and pop bottles, the fruit squashing and breaking into little bits, the ### Singing, Shouting Cards Give Trainer a Bath, Clothes and All.

DETROIT, Oct. 9 (AP).—Singing, shouting and tossing their baseball equipment all around the room, the victorious St. Louis Cardinals indulged in a wild celebration when they reached their dressing room after licking the Tigers to win the world's baseball championship today.

Frankie Frisch, plucky little leader of the Cardinals, sweaty and his face streaked with dust, wandered around the room with an unread telegram in his hand, too dazed and speechless to say a word.

Suddenly he found a hand gripping his. It was that of Mickey Cochrane, manager of the losing Tigers.

"Frankie, you beat us, congratulations."

Throat Too Choked.

Frisch's throat was too choked to say a word. He slapped Cochrane on the back a half-dozen times and there was just a trace of a tear in his eyes.

"It was a touch series and I'm glad it is over and I'm glad we won," Frisch said. "We beat a great ball club. Cochrane is a great manager. You can have all the .800 hitters, but I'll take that two-base hit I got in the third inning. That was a million dollar hit to me."

Within a few seconds the room was like an insane asylum. The conquering Cardinals started singing and shouting and then grabbed their trainer, Dr. H. G. Weaver, throwing him under the showers, clothes and all.

Dizzy Is Hilarious.

Big Dizzy Dean was surrounded, with every one of the Cardinals shaking his hand. He was wearing a white tropical sun helmet and carrying a big, rubber inflated tiger, painted yellow with brown stripes. Dean took the tail of the tiger in his teeth and shook it like a dog shakes a bone.

Dizzy was as hilarious as a school kid.

"Boy," he said, "you know what I told you when I came up here. If I was right they didn't have no chance.

"Look at old Frankie Frisch over there. He's the best manager in both leagues. He knows more baseball than all them Tigers thrown together. Everything was just lovely today. I let them Tigers have a couple of base hits and then I throwed strikes at 'em. Boy, there was nothing to it."

Will Rogers Strolls In.

Will Rogers, a fellow Oklahoman, came in to shake Dean's hand.

"We done it, didn't we boy?" Dean told Rogers.

Baseball celebrities by the score came trouping into the room to congratulate Frisch and his players. Sam Breadon, owner of the Cardinals, gave Frisch a big hug. William Harridge, president of the American League, extended congratulations. Branch Rickey, general manager of the Cardinals, followed.

Frisch, referring to the violent demonstration which followed the incident between Joe Medwick, Cardinal left fielder, and Marvin Owen, Tiger third sacker, was inclined to pass it over "as one of those things."

Defends the Kid.

"The kid wouldn't spike anybody," he said. "He was just sliding into third base."

Medwick was fully dressed and pacing the floor when the Cardinals came into the dressing room.

"I didn't mean to harm anybody but I don't want anybody to kick me," he said. "I offered to shake hands with Owen on the spot but

Fans Upheld By Ball Czar Landis

Says Medwick's Spiking Was Deliberate; "Just Slid," Said Joe.

DETROIT, Oct. 9 (AP).—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, commissioner of baseball, said tonight that he "couldn't blame the crowd" for its violent demonstration toward Joe Medwick, St. Louis Cardinal left fielder, which halted today's world series game for 17 minutes in the sixth inning.

The 17,000 occupants of the left field bleachers were expressing their resentment for what they apparently believed was an attempt by Medwick to spike Marvin Owen, Tiger infielder, as he slid into third after tripling. Others considered the incident as just an exchange of kicks between the two players.

"Couldn't Blame Crowd."

"I saw what Medwick did and I couldn't blame the crowd for what it did," was the comment, after the game, of Commissioner Landis who took the unprecedented action of ordering Medwick from the game after taking statements from both the Cardinal outfielder and the Tiger third baseman at his box.

The bleacher crowd at the time was throwing debris upon the field as rapidly as groundkeepers could remove it, obviously determined that Medwick should not stay in the game.

"The umpires in a World Series," Commissioner Landis continued, "are instructed not to bench a player except for the most extreme cause, and so it was up to me. I did the proper thing."

Just Slid, Says Joe.

Medwick, who was escorted by six policemen to the Cardinal dressing room, said of the incident at third base: "I don't know what happened or how it happened. I just slid into third base, that's all."

Owen refused to discuss it, except to say he was sorry Medwick had to leave the game.

Meanwhile, massed in solid lines along the runways and closely guarding the doors of the players' dressing room, 60 patrolmen gave the field the appearance of a bank marked for a holdup.

When the Cardinals stormed into their room, the police went into action. Cameramen lost their cameras as they tried to crowd through the narrow doorway with the jubilant players. When the last player had disappeared into the Cardinal quarters, the police again formed a solid line in front of the doorway.

A few minutes before the St. Louis players left the field, the patrolmen formed a double line at the dressing room door. At the instant the players came out, the procession of blue-coats, shoving aside the curious, moved toward the nearest exist.

Dizzy Leads Parade.

Leading the parade was Dizzy Dean, attired in a tropical sun helmet. Grinning from ear to ear, he tipped his hat repeatedly and the police forced their way quickly through several hundred curious, but not hostile, fans massed in the runway.

Few recognized Medwick, a felt hat pulled over his eyes. Beyond a few cries of "Where's Medwick?" there was little to indicate that the fans were in angry mood.

The moment the players and officers were outside the park, attendants slammed down the exit's steel gates, preventing hundreds of fans from watching the Cardinals being herded quickly in waiting buses.

Twenty mounted patrolmen circled the buses, breaking up groups of persons and keeping the several thousands who had waited for the Cardinals from massing near the exit.

The journey from the dressing room to the buses took less than two minutes, and the impressive, business-like guard, together with at least 30 more policemen who ranged through the crowd outside the park, discouraged any plans fans might have had toward violence.

Dean Brothers Are a Good Ball Team

Medwick and Gehringer Are Batting Leaders of Series.

DETROIT, Oct. 9 (AP).—The Cardinals did more than "hold that Tiger." They slaughtered him on the final day. Their aim was so perfect that they scored 17 hits.

The series proved conclusively that the Dean brothers are some ball team. Together they won 39 victories in the dizzy Cardinal pennant drive—Dizzy winning 30 and Paul bagging 19—and all four victories in the World Series. The Tigers earned only seven runs off Dizzy and Daffy in 44 innings.

Ducky Medwick of the Cards and Charley Gehringer of the Tigers were the batting champions of the series, each collecting 11 hits in 29 times at bat. Rip Collins got 11 out of 30 and Pepper Martin hit 11 out of 31. The series record for hits is 12.

The Cardinals set a record for most times at bat for one team in a seven-game series, going up 262 times. The previous record, established by the Giants in 1924, was 253. The shutout plastered on the Tigers by Dizzy Dean today, 11 to 0, also was the worst in series history.

Manager Frisch now holds four World Series records by wide margins. They are: Most World Series games, 50; most hits, 58; most times at bat, 197, and most singles, 45. He also has played in 8 World Series, landing on the world's championship team four times.

Throughout the series, the Cardinals did not score once in either the eighth or ninth inning. They scored a total of 10 in the third inning, including the big 7 that polished off the Tiger today.

A few inches might have changed the entire complexion of today's game. Just before Frisch cleaned the bases with his double in the noisy third inning, he hit the ball an inch in front of the plate. The ball bounded back foul to avert a certain double play.

Couple Names New Son In Honor of Paul Dean

St. Louis, Oct. 9 (AP).—Paul Dean's sixth-game victory over the Detroit Tigers will be remembered a long time by the Clifford Wilson family here.

A son was born to Mrs. Wilson yesterday while the game was in progress. When the final score was announced Mrs. Wilson said her son would be christened Paul Dean Wilson.

Frisch to Pilot Cards Again Next Year

Breadon Plans to Keep Club Does Not Anticipate Any Hold-Outs.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 9 (AP).—Frankie Frisch, as everyone who gave it a thought suspected all along, will manage the St. Louis Cardinals, new world champions, again in 1935.

While the job always has been regarded as safe for the old Fordham flash, official word from the head man of the front office was not forthcoming until today.

"Ithink Frisch is a great manager," President Sam Breadon said in Detroit. "I think he has a great deal of courage and that is the kind of man I want to handle my ball club. I have not talked terms, but he will handle the club next year."

Received No Offers.

Asked about the current crop of rumors concerning the sale of the club, Breadon said he had received no offers, had made no overtures to anyone and that at the present moment did not consider a sale of the team.

"If somebody would come along and offer me an attractive price for my holdings, naturally I would sell," he added. "But nobody has. I have never considered what the property is really worth. Nobody has made me an offer and I have never asked a price. I'm not tired of baseball. I like the game and want to continue in it."

Although he phrased it differently, Breadon indicated he expected signing his star hurlers, Jerome Herman ("Dizzy") and Paul ("Daffy") Dean to 1935 contracts would be just a breeze.

"I don't know when I'll sign them

Digulian Star As Eastern Wins, 25-0

Fist-Semester Half Back Leads as St. John's Team Is Routed.

A NEW high school football star pranced into prominence with pounding feet yesterday in the fast-stepping person of 15-year-old Charles (Chick) Di Gulian, Eastern High's freshman half back. Hardly out of knee pants, the rough-and-tumble youngster proceeded to take a lion's share of the individual honors in Eastern's 25-to-0 victory over St. John's at Eastern Stadium

The Stewart Junior student of last semester, ripped off about half the yardage gained by Eastern during his term in the game. He snatched a pass from Bob Hart in the second period with a nifty catch on the St. John's 1-yard line to score Eastern's first touchdown and, after making intermittent dashes all over the field, finally broke loose for 36 yards in the last quarter to put the ball in position for Eastern's fourth touchdown on the St. John's 12-yard line.

Shares Day's Honors.

While Di Gulian's successful debut in high school football stood out throughout the afternoon, the hard-running lad had to share part of hte ball-carrying laurels with Hart and "Hawk" Shaw, his fellow backs.

Eastern got possession of the ball shortly after the opening whistle when Barrett fumbled one the St. John's 40-yard line and Wiersham recovered. Shaw fumbled a few plays later and St. John's recovered. After several punting exchanges, Eastern took the ball on the St. John's 20-yard line, Barrett's kick falling short as the Eastern line hurryed him.

Kenwood Pro Scores 139, Is 3 Under Par; Miss Claytor Loses

Mrs. Meckley Winner in Match Play of Mid-Atlantic.

FLASHING the form that won her five District golf championships, Mrs. Doroth White Nicholson, of the host club, shot a brilliant 83 yesterday at Washington Golf and Country Club to defeat Miss Louise Claytor, of Chevy Chase, 3 and 1, in the feature match of the first round of the Middle Atlantic women's tournament.

One down at the turn, Mrs. Nicholson toured the last nine in 36, one over par men's par, for one of the greatest finishes in the history of the championship.

Favorites in the other seven championship flight matches reached the second round. Mrs. David Clark, of Army and Navy, whose 83 on Monday won the medal and set a new competitive course record, continued her impressive stroking at the expense of Mrs. R. C. Welton, of Richmond, Va., winning, 8 and 7. Out in 41, Mrs. Clark played the next two holes in even par, halving the eleventh, where the match ended with a birdie deuce.

Mrs. Meckley Is Winner.

Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Indian Spring, eliminated Mrs. J. R. DeFarges, of Columbia, 7 and 5, and Mrs. Jack Scott, out in 42, had an easy time subduing Mrs. George H. Parker, of Kenwood, 6 and 4.

Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional, winner of The Washington Post Trophy, had to stage a comeback to defeat Mrs. Hume Wrong, of Chevy Chase. Two down going to the tenth, Mrs. Mackenzie shot a 43 on the back nine to win six of the nine holes.

Lily Harper, of Portsmouth, Virginia champion, lost but two holes in defeating Mrs. Hume Peabody, of Army and Navy, 5 and 4, although the youthful 1933 finalist's shooting was not up to standard.

Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, of Congressional, put out Mrs. Bishop Hill, of Chevy Chase, 3 and 2, in a tight match, and Miss Susan Hacker, of Chevy Chase, was given an unexpectedly close battle by Mrs. J. T. Powell, of Manor, winning by the same count. Mrs. Powell led for the first seven holes, and was 1 up at the turn, but Miss Hacker outsteadied her opponent on the stretch.

Mrs. Nicolson Stars.

It took birdies to beat Mrs. Nicolson on the final nine, and Miss Claytor was not equal to the occasion, though she shot an 86. Out in 47 with a 9 on the 472-yard fourth, Mrs. Nicolson started back 4-3-4 to take a 2-up lead, became 3-up with a par 3 on the fourteenth, lost the sixteenth to a par, sank a four-footer for a birdie three on the seventeenth, and scored her par 4 for a win on the home hole. She had six 1-putt greens and used up only 12 putts on the back nine.

In this morning's second round, Mrs. Clark is opposed to Mrs. Dowdall, and Mrs. Meckley and Mrs. Scott clash in what looms as the headline match. Mrs. Nicolson's opponent is Mrs. Mackenzie, and Miss Harper battles Miss Hacker.

Diffenbaugh Is Second in State Golf, Five Strokes Behind.

By Dave Herman.

ONLY a shell of his former self in the National Capital Open, Al Houghton, Kenwood professional, redeemed himself yesterday at Indian Spring by winning the Maryland Open championship with a 36-hole total of 139.

Scintillating rounds of 69 and 70 —three under par figures—enabled Houghton to triumph for the third straight season. He won the title first at Columbia, and repeated last year in Baltimore.

In spreadeagling a field of 40 pros and amateurs, the Kenwood ace scored like a machine, rifling seven birdies, going over par only on three holes, three-putting, but two greens, missing few greens and steering clear of all hazards.

The victory made Houghton richer by $150, the first prize money.

Diffenbaugh Second.

Five strokes to the rear of the champion came little George Diffenbaugh, the host pro, who finished with 72-72—144. At the end of the morning round, Houghton held a three-stroke lead on the little Indian Spring teacher.

The battle became tighter after nine additional holes. At this stage, Houghton had lost strokes to par on the third and fifth, and went out in 37, as Diffenbaugh leveled par with a 35.

On the thirty-first hole, a 334-yarder, Diffenbaugh knocked his approach 4 feet from the pin for a birdie 3 to catch up with Houghton, whose best was a par 4.

Then Houghton released a barrage of birdies and pars, firing 2-4-5-2-4—three under par—to pound out a 33. He plunked in a 20-footer for a birdie on the thirty-second, an 8-footer for a bird on the thirty-third, parred the thirty-fourth, deuced the thirty-fifth, and preserved his par on the home hole by nailing a 6-footer after over-shooting the green.

V.M.I. Drills Hard For Columbia Tilt

Lexington, Va., Oct. 9 (Spl.).—Encouraged by a dwindling casualty list, V. M. I. football players are hard at work in preparation for their intersectional game with Columbia at New York Saturday. There is every chance that the Cadets will be able to muster their full strength to stop the charges of Al Barabas, fiercest of Lou Little's Lions.

Coaches Bill Raftery and Ed Hess were pleased with the work of the Flying Squadron against South Carolina except for an epidemic of back field fumbles with a wet ball and a slipped block that allowed the Gamecocks to duplicate Duke's feat of scoring on a blocked punt.

Play by Play as Cardinals Gained Title

FIRST INNING, CARDINALS—Martin fanned, swinging hard. The crowd let loose a terrific roar. Rothrock hit sharply over Rogell's head and Dean to second when White handled the ball poorly. The scorer credited Rothrock with a two-bagger. Frisch lifted a short fly that Rosell caught back in the grass. Medwick fouled to Owen in front of the boxes off left field. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

FIRST INNING, TIGERS—White grounded out, Frisch to Collins. Cochrane received an ovation before he grounded out, Frisch to Collins. Gehringer lifted a high fly to Rothrock near the right-field line. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SECOND INNING, CARDINALS—Collins hit sharply to center for a single on the first pitch. Delancey grounded to Owen and the Tigers pulled a double play, Owen to Gehringer to Greenberg. Orsatti singled past Gehringer. Orsatti was thrown out trying to steal, Cochrane to Gehringer. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SECOND INNING, TIGERS — Goslin bounced to Collins and was out at first on a pretty play. Collins to Dean. Rogell bounced to Durocher, but was safe at first when Collins failed to hold the shortstop's low throw. Collins was charged with an error. Greenberg fanned, missing a curve by a wide margin. Owen bounced to Martin and Rogell was forced at second, Martin to Frisch. No runs, no hits, one error, one left.

THIRD INNING, CARDINALS—Durocher flied to White. Dean dropped a hit in left field and stretched it to a double as Goslin handled the ball slowly. Dizzy beat the throw with a good slide. Martin grounded to Greenberg and beat it out for a scratch hit, as Auker came over to take the toss from the first baseman. Dean reached third. Rothrock walked, the fourth ball being inside and the bases were filled. Frisch hit sharply into right field for a double, scoring Dean, Martin and Rothrock. The ball caromed off Fox's glove and rolled almost to the boxes before he recovered it for a relay to the infield. Cochrane removed Auker from the box and summoned Schoolboy Rowe, the victim of yesterday's Tiger setback. Medwick grounded out, Rogell to Greenberg as Frisch ran to third. Colling sinkled sharply through the infield to left, scoring Frisch. Delancey smashed a long drive to the right-field wall for a double, scoring Collins. Rowe was taken out of the box and was replaced by Elon Hogsett, the Indian southpaw. Orsatti walked, the fourth ball being wide. Durocher hit to right for a single and the bases were full. A fast throw-in by Fox kept Delancey from trying to score. Dean hit a grounder along the third base line for a scratch hit, scoring Delancey and leaving the bases still full. Dean's hit was a hopper that Owen was unable to handle. Martin walked, and Orsatti was forced over the plate with the seventh Cardinal run in the inning. Hogsett was taken out of the box. Tommy Bridges, slim right-hander, who pitched the Tigers to a brilliant victory over Dizzy Dean last Sunday at St. Louis, was the fourth Detroit pitcher. Twelve Cardinals had come to bat in the inning and the bases were still clogged with two out. Rothrock scrounded to Gehringer and Martin was forced at second, Gehringer to Rosell as the inning finally closed. Seven runs, six hits, three left on bases.

THIRD INNING, TIGERS—Fox lined to Orsatti. Bridges was thrown out by Frisch at first after the Cardinal manager juggled a hard line drive. White flied to Orsatti, who made a nice running catch in left center. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

FOURTH INNING, CARDINALS—Frisch grounded sharply to Gehringer and was tossed out at first. Medwick flied to Fox. Collins dropped his third straight hit into right field for a single. DeLancey bounced to Gehringer and Collins was forced at second, Gehringer to Rogell. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

FOURTH INNING, TIGERS—Cochrane popped to Frisch. Gehringer smashed a single to right for the first base hit off Dean. Goslin hoisted a short fly to Medwick. Rogell grounded to Frisch and Gehringer was forced at second, Frisch to Durocher. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

FIFTH INNING, CARDINALS—Orsatti flied to Goslin in short left. Durocher lifted another high fly to Goslin. Dean fanned, waiving his bat at a fast ball and the crowd yelled with delight. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

FIFTH INNING, TIGERS—Greenberg pumped a long single to right center. Owen flied to Rothrock. Fox hit sharply to left for a double, sending Greenberg to third. Fox barely beat Medwick's relay to second base. Bridges fanned on a called third strike. White bounced to Durocher and was thrown out at first on a nice play as the shortstop grabbed the ball in front of second base and threw to Collins on the run. No runs, two hits, no errors, two left.

SIXTH INNING, CARDINALS— Martin slashed a hit to left and stretched it to two bases on Goslin's poor handling of the ball. The Goose was charged with an error, and Martin credited with a single. Rothrock flied to Goslin. Frisch flied to White. Medwick pumped a long hit against the right field bleachers for a triple, scoring Martin. Collins belted his fourth straight hit to center, scoring Medwick. Collins ran to second when White fumbled the ball for an error. Delancey swung and missed a third strike, but Cochrane dropped the ball and threw to Greenberg to retire the batsman. Two runs, three hits, one error, one left.

SIXTH INNING, TIGERS—Fullis now playing left field. Cochrane lined to Rothrock near the right field line. Gehringer was thrown out on hopper to Durocher, who made a beautiful pickup and throw. Goslin lifted a high foul to Collins back of third. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SEVENTH INNING, CARDINALS—Orsatti lifted a long fly to White. Durocher sounded a triple against the bleacher wall in right center. Dean bounced out, Owen to Greenberg. Martin grounded to Gehringer and Durocher scored, while Pepper reached first safely on Gehringer's fumble. Rothrock hit to the bleacher barrier in left center, scoring Martin, and pulling up at second for a two-base hit. Frisch flied deep to Fox. Two runs, two hits

Gold and Black, Don Meade Up, Drives to Head Victory in Feature Race at Laurel

Kacala Gives Knights Gal Poor Ride

Snapback Is Winner of Steeplechase in Close Finish.

GOLD AND BLACK, a daughter of Big Blaze and a pet around the Glen Riddle Farms tSable, drove to victory yesterday in the Pocahontas, the feature race at nearby Laurel. Don Meade put up one of those rides that he generally reserves for Kentucky derbies and the heavy stake events to bring the 3-year-old filly on to the wire a short head in front of the favored Knights Gal. A length and a half away, Kate struggled into third money.

Jockey J. Gacala came in for much of the blame for the defeat of Knights Gal. From the press box, over the track. He was inside, outhe appeared to ride the horse all the stretch he made a move from side and then inside of the field. IIn the center to the rail that probably cost him the race.

Kate First to Show.

Kate was first to show in front as the field began the mile and 70 yards test. However, Meade soon had Gold and Black winging along ahead. He rode a hard, arm-swinging race throughout and held up a tiring young horse at the finish.

Ideal racing weather continued to prevail and a better-than-average early week crowd was on hand. Both the longshot and favorite players had their innings.

Kalola, a daughter of Sir Barton, and a consistent miss-out Detroit way, won the day's opening sprint by a head in a stretch drive with Prince Wick. Two lengths away came Ned O, to take the show money. Jocky McManus had the mount on Kalola and for most of theh route it appeared he was content to play follow the leader as Jockey Wright winged along on Prince Wick. However, Kalola came through with a closing rush that Prince Wick failed to match. The winner paid $9.30.

Except for a brief interval soon after the start, Sang Froid was in command throughout the running of the second race. Installed the favorite, Sang Froid held a length advantage over Revonah and three lengths over Some Good at hte finish line. It was a $5.10 pay-off on the winner.

NED O. worked his way up on the outside, but failed to threaten in the closing stages. MR. MOSS could not gain a forward position during the running. BARNEY SEXTON lacked early speed. REVONAH, stoutly handled from the beginning, went to the outside in the last five-sixteenths and finished full of run. SOME GOOD was vigorously handled for the entire trip. He held on gamely when the final test came. OCCIDENTAL hung after making a bold effort approaching the home stretch. SQUEEZE OUT could not reach a forward position. SNAP BACK, steadily reserved for the first mile, drove on even terms with TANARINGO at the tenth fence, raced abreast thereafter and was up on the flat after clearing the final fence when Bauman outrode Smiley. TANARINGO went into an easy lead after the second fence, jumped boldly at all of his fences, and then continued strongly when forced to a tenacious drive in the last six furlongs. WRACKON was always close to the leaders at any stage. ANCHORS AWEIGH faltered after making strong efforts to go to the leaders in the last mile. THE CHISELER was always far back. SUN FAIRPLAY had nice speed to enter into a contending position in the opening furlong, responded strongly after reaching the main stretch, and then came out nicely after passing FLIGHT OF GOLD inside the closing furlong. FLIGHT OF GOLD displayed keen speed from the start, raced strongly reserved for the first half-mile, and then began to tire badly as he swerved repeatedly when challenged. CALUMET DICK went strongly on the outside and then finished stoutly. SUN IDOL weakened after a determined bid at the stretch turn. COIL was close up early. STAR SHADOW was shuffled back early and could never enter contention thereafter. BRAVING DANGER went evenly. The others were outrun.

BLOSSOM AGAIN set a fast pace from the beginning, shook off GALOMAR and LISA BELLE, and then held on resolutely for the stretch drive. MARCELLA MISS offered a strong effort midway of the home stretch, but tired suddenly after making a bold effort approaching the home stretch. DIABLESSE finished fast after beginning slowly. PALMA lacked early speed. ROSEBLOOM could not better her position. LISA BELLE stopped, as did GALOMAR.

GOLD AND BLACK, taken under slight restraint after reaching the back stretch, met stout efforts from KATE until reaching the home stretch, bore out during the closing furlong, then held on stoutly to stall off KNIGHTS GAL. Latter, taken hold of in the middle of the back stretch, came through on the inside of the winner when straightened for the final drive and closed with a rush. KATE, rated close up, offered stout bids in the last five-sixteenths, but weakened after being forced out by the winner at the stretch turn. GREYGLADE saved a great deal of ground when the leaders swung wide into the home stretch, but could not better her position. DUSKY PRINCESS was a trailer throughout.

Dizzy Dean Blanks Tigers, 11-0, As Cardinals Take World Title

protection to both Medwick and Owen. The four umpires and cooler heads quieted the uprising at this point.

Fans Threaten Medwick.

But when Medwick sauntered back to left field at the end of the inning, the wildest, most uproarious sequence in oWrld Series annals ensued. Fruit, pop bottles and other missiles showered around the Cardinal outfielder as the bleacherites set up angry shouts of "kill him" and "take him out."

Not until Baseball Commissioner Landis had summoned Medwick, Owen, the two managers and Umpire-in-Chief Klem to his field box, heard their testimony and ordered Medwick from the game "in the interest of his own safety," were the enraged fans appeased.

Under a police escort, Medwick marched across the field to the dressing room with Tiger fandom booing viciously.

Before Landis finally decreed that Medwick must leave the game, Umpire Klem three times had ordered the game resumed. Three times Medwick attempted to return to his post and each time a new outburst of missles fell in his direction. Each time he found safety in short center field and regarded his tormentors with a sneer.

Pepper Does Juggling Act.

At the end of 10 minutes it had developed into a comic opera state of affairs, with the irrepressible Pepper Martin rushing out to Medwick's side and staging a juggling act with the fruit strewn over the outfield. Cardinal players and Medwick were playing catch with the vegetables as the ground srew attempted to clear the field with bags and buckets as receptacles.

Three times the infielders attempted to return to their posts to no avail as the bleacherites refused to permit Medwick to remain in the game. Once Manager Mickey Cochrane of the Tigers came out to the bleachers and appealed to the fans for order, but here again they resumed their demands of "Take him out."

Cochrane was following the rules of baseball which places upon the home-town team the responsibility of the conduct of the fans. Umpire-in-cief Klem had the right to declare the game forfeited to the Cardinals, Cochrane knew. But with three more innings to play, there still remained a slender chance for Detroit to win despite the 9 to 0 score by which the Cardinals led.

Mickey Cochrane entrusted the last hopes of the Tigers to Eldon Auker, the under-handing rookie who had repulsed the Cardinals in the 10-to-4 game at St. Louis, but today Auker was no puzzle to the Cardinals, inspired by the knowledge that they would need but few runs to win with Dizzy Dean pitching.

Cards Score 7 in Third.

In one thundrous thrust the Cardinals won the deciding ball game, a roaring third inning which saw the amazing Dizzy, with a solid two-base hit, launch a seven-run outburst that blasted Auker and Schoolboy Rowe from the mound, brought 13 Cardinal hitters to bat, and placed the game almost hopelessly beyond reach of Detroit.

Out of that inning emerged Manager Frankie Frisch as a co-hero with Dean, for it was Frisch's two-base hit with the bases full that sent three St. Louis runs across the plate and established the Cardinals in the lead that Dean never relinquished.

Jealously Dizzy guarded his bid for the first shut-out of the series, permitting not a single Tiger hit until the fourth inning and applying the finishing touches with a flourish in the ninth when he held the Tigers runless despite two hits with ons out.

With Big Hank Greenberg at bat, representing the next to the last Tiger hope of avoiding the ignoming of a shutout in the ninth, Dean struck him out and then laughed brazenly full in the face of the discomfited Greenberg. Dizzy still was putting on a show.

Detroit Fails Again.

When little Leo Durocher fielded Owen's grounder for the final out, Detroit had failed again to win a World Series, failed for the fourth time after winning four American League pennants.

Heaping higher the grief of Detroit was their inheritance of one World Series record of dubious distinction. The six pitchers Cochrane was forced to call into the fray—Auker, Rowe, Hogsett, Bridges, Marberry and Crowder—constituted a new mark for a single series game. Five pitchers used by one club had been the record.

In the finale, the pitching aces of both teams, "Dizzy" Dean and "School Boy" Rowe, were facing each other, but the clash was almost ludicrous. Rowe found his way into the game in that uproarious third inning, and pitched only to three batters, putting one out and leaving the game under duress when Delancey banged one of his pitches for a double against the right field fence.

Dizzy Dean Starts Rally.

That third inning forms an exciting story.

Auker had been helped to dispose of a Cardinal threat in the second inning by a double play started by Bill Rogell, but with one out in the third inning the game collapsed upon him.

Even as Brother Paul "Dizzy" Dean had exhibited his batting prowess to drive in the winning run yesterday, Dizzy lashed a double between Goose Goslin and the left field line. By a hard sprint and a perfect slide into the bag, he reached second a split-second ahead of Goslin's perfect throw.

Pepper Martin here took a hand in the proceedings, bouncing a ball to Greenberg who first attempted a race to the bag with the fleet Martin, then decided to throw to Auker, who had been slow in starting for the base. Martin beat the ball and Auker for a single, and Dean galloped to third. Martin promptly stole second, and the bases were full when Auker walked Rothrock.

For nearly five minutes, during which he fouled off half a dozen pitches, Frankie Frisch kept the Tiger fans distraught, before he crashed a double to right field that sent all three runners scurrying home.

Rowe Driven From Box.

Out went Auker and Cochrane called for Rowe, who made a majestic entrance from behind the stands, where he had been warming up. Tiger fans howled their faith in the "school boy," and he immediately disposed of Medwick on a ground ball. But Jim Collins, who later was to equal the series record of four hits in a game, walloped a single to left that scored Frisch, and the Tigers had a 4-to-0 lead.

It required only a double by Delancey against the right-field fence, scoring Collins, to convince Cochrane that Rowe was "off" and into the box trotted Hogsett, who had been the relief-pitching star of the series.

But Hogsett's pitching was no relief to the Tigers. He walked Orsatti to fill the bases and

Stocks Record Fractional Dip For 3d Session

Assassination News Halts Rally Efforts; Sales, 773,280 Shares.

New York, Oct. 9 (AP).—Recovery forces in security markets ran into an unexpected obstacle today in the news of the assassination of King Alexander of Yugoslavia and French Foreign Minister Louis Barthou.

While the prospect of political repercussions was minimized in international banking quarters, efforts to rally stocks were abandoned.

Except for scattered gains, stocks finished lower for the third session. The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 selected issues dipped seven-tenths of a point to 70.1.

Merchandise Share Buying.

Heavy buying of low-priced merchandise shares, notably McLellan and McCrory Stores issues, broadened out into a general advance after the market had lapsed into extreme early dullness. Before the rally had made much headway the tragedy in France became known in the financial district.

McLellan Stores common and preferred advanced about 3 points and held most of their gains to the finish.

McCrory preferred also ran up 3 points. Both companies have been in receivership for some time.

Metal Shares Firm.

Nonferrous metal shares firmed as both gold and silver prices were raised to new tops in London, but they reacted with the general list later.

American Can, J. I. Case, U. S. Steel, Chrysler, Eastman Kodak, Radio preferred B, and Union Pacific finished fractionally to about a point lower.

Swelled by the heavy trading in the low-priced merchandise issues, volume on the stock exchange increased to 773,380 shares compared with 451,400 yesterday.

Farm Products' Prices Move Into Steadier Position in Week

Condition Is Supported by Limited Quantity of Supplies in Many Lines; Grain Drops Sharply in Response to Weak Foreign Markets.

(U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Economics.)

Prices of leading farm products seemed to have worked into more steady position early in the second week of October, supported by the limited quantity of supplies in many lines, but the declines of early October gave the trend a weak appearance. Cotton markets have been depressed for some time under the light demand and the possibility of production larger than expected. Grain prices dropped sharply in response to week foreign markets and some competition of Canadian imports. Live stock sold moderately lower, although meats are selling well with cooler weather. Hides sold lower, owing to the liberal supply. Wool markets continue dull and steady.

Most other farm products showed slight or irregular price changes the first week of October. Butter markets were unsettled. Cheese values held firmly. Best grades of fresh eggs advanced a litle. Most lines of dressed poultry sold slowly with some price declines.

Apple prices were maintained and those of other fruits were fairly steady. Potatoes, onions and cabbage were in ample supply near the height of the shipping season, and most price changes were downward. Prices of tomatoes, cucumbers, carrots and Eastern lettuce showed gains under limited current supply.

Cotton Dull and Weak.

Prices of spot cotton declined further and reached a level about 1¼ cents below the high point of early August. More favorable prospects for increased yields, relatively large ginnings, continued low exports, and slow cloth markets, also some declines in prices of other commodities were conditions making for weak cotton markets.

Reluctance on the part of holders to sell their cotton at present price levels because of the 12-cent loan, along with the urgent covering of forward sales by merchants, continued to maintain spot prices unusually high as compared with sales for future delivery. The restricted spot sales furnish evidence of the general holding of cotton, apparently stimulated in the main by the availability of the 12-cent loan to producers.

Some increase in inquiries and in actual buying of raw cotton for immediate needs was reported in Southern mill centers, but continued dullness prevailed in the New England mill markets. Demand for export cotton continued light. Picking and ginning continues to progress at an unusually rapid rate.

Grain Markets Lower.

Developments in the foreign wheat situation are still the leading influence in domestic grain markets. Price trends were influenced also by generally favorable progress of new crop seedings. Marketings of wheat remained relatively light. Milling demand became more active as a result of increased flour sales, as prices declined.

Rye markets declined 4 cents to 5 cents per bushel. Corn markets also were influenced by the weakness in wheat and prices declined 3 cents to 4 cents per bushel, despite the prospective short crop and only moderate receipts. The first car of new corn received at Chicago sold at 71 cents per bushel. Oats followed declines in other grains.

Barley prices turned downward along with other grains. Demand for malting remained good although other grades were rather slow sale.

Feed Markets Weaker.

Continued dullness prevailed in feed markets during early October as a result of lower prices of grain and live stock, improvement in late pastures, and further slackening in demand. The average of feed prices dropped about 4 per cent.. Wheat feed prices declined 50 cents to $1 per ton with greater weakness in the heavy feed for which inquiry was very slow.

Cottonseed meal and gluten feed were independently firm, and prices were generally 50 cents to $1 above those of late September. Linseed meal weakened further despite unusually light offerings and hominy feed declined around $1 per ton. Alfalfa meal was firm, reflecting the strength of the hay market, while other feeds were barely steady. Tankage prices dropped $5 per ton as demand became less urgent.

Live Stock Prices Sink.

With good and choice grades of fed steers and yearlings in liberal supply, such kinds bore the brunt of early October decline of 25 cents to 50 cents in the fat cattle market at Chicago, reflecting unsatisfactory conditions in the dressed beef market. Market values for grass cattle, both on killer and country account, were relatively well sustained. The top on fed steers at Chicago fell to $10.25. The quotable limit on hogs at Chicago was $6.35. The general level of hog prices was the lowest since the early part of the sensational August advance. The top at Chicago during the corresponding week of 1933 was $5.45, two years ago, $4.15, and three years ago, $5.75. Very few fat lambs sold in Chicago trading above $6.50. Most native ewes moved for slaughter at $1.50@$2.25.

Spot wools in Boston, while relatively quiet as far as actual sales were concerned, received numerous bids, many of which appeared to be closing the gap between previous bids, or prices on direct sales, and asking prices on the bulk of the wools held on that market.

Federal Loans Turn Easy; List Sags; Trading, $14,566,000.

The declining groups were foods, fuel, including petroleum and its products, grains, feeds and live stock, textiles, miscellaneous commodities, building materials, metals, and fats and oils. Most of the groups showed decided losses. The advancing groups were chemicals and drugs, and fertilizer materials. The gains were small.

Virginia Farm Incomes Rise 12 Million Over '33

Richmond, Va., Oct. 9 (AP).—Using estimates to bring figures in his annual report to the Governor for the year ended June 30 down to date, George W. Koiner, commissioner of agriculture, said today that Virginia farmers' income this year was as much as $26,000,000 higher than for 1932 and nearly $12,000,000 higher than for last year.

He estimated this year's cash income at $88,000,000, as compared with $76,210,000 in 1933 and $61,766,000 in 1932. The Governor was told that higher prices for early potatoes, cotton, peanuts and tobacco accounted for much of the increase for last year. This year prospects were brightened by tobacco of good quality selling at the highest price obtained in the last 15 years; good crops of such staples as corn and unusually fine grazing.

Wheat Values Close Higher In Quiet Sales

Corn and Oats Record Larger Gains; Liverpool Prices Rise.

Chicago, Oct. 9 (AP).—In a listless trade, grain prices fluctuated nervously today closing at net gains for the day that ranged from fractions in wheat to more than a cent in corn, oats and rye.

The market undertone firmed noticeably following an opening dip that occurred when resting orders to sell were executed.

Improved sentiment in wheat was attributed largely to a moderate rally at Liverpool, dry weather complaints from the domestic wheat belt Southwest and failure of the Winnipeg market to reflect yesterday's closing weakness here.

Wheat Closes Higher.

At the closing bell wheat was one-quarter to five-eighths of a cent higher than Monday's finish; December new 96¾-96⅞, while corn was five-eighths to 1⅛ cents up, December new 74-74⅛.

Closing prices in wheat were about at the day's top, a cent higher than the early low figures. May at one time touched a high of 97⅛ cents a bushel.

The day's outstanding political development, assassination of the King of Yugoslavia and the French foreign minister, apparently exerted only a temporary influence on the market. Trading increased following circulation of this news. Eastern interests being sellers of both wheat and corn, and wheat dipped about ½ cent. Independent strength in corn was a feature of the trade. Continued demand for this grain by cash and processing interests resulted in a light but steady flow of buying orders.

Cause of Recession.

The late recession of wheat from the day's high was to some extent in sympathy with a weakening in stocks and partly due to profit-taking, but pressure was not sustained.

Liverpool's strength was attributed to reported purchase of four cargoes of Argentine wheat and one of Australian by China and also to discouraging crop news from Australia. Winnipeg was aided by the lifting of hedges against sales of approximately 750,000 bushels of wheat for export.

Dry weather reports from the Southwest constituted the most important weather news. Dust storms were reported in parts of western Kansas, Oklahoma and in the Texas Panhandle, and it was said much of the top soil in this region is deficient in moisture.

Oats continued to display independent strength and closed ½ to 1¼ cent higher on local buying. Lard closed steady after a weak opening, following the course of grains. Clear bellies were steady to a little higher.

Juarez Cotton Farmers Strike Against Tax Levy

Juarez, Mexico, Oct. 9 (U.P.).—Six thousand Juarez valley farmers paralyzed this section's cotton industry with a strike in protest against an 11-pesos-per-bale tax levied by the state.

Farmers contend that the tax will be borne entirely by producers and that it is unjust during the dry spell. The state contends that consumers will pay at least one-half of the tax. A committee of valley community mayors left for Chihuahua City to ask Gov. Rodrigo Quevedo and the Legislature to repeal the tax.

ugly brown and white bottles striking the turf and rolling over and over.

Terrifying Sight.

I watched hte crowd and Medwick and the pelting missiles through my field glasses, and it was a terrifying sight. Every face in the crowd, women and men, was distorted with rage. Mouths were torn wide open, eyes glistened and shone in the sun. All fists were clenched. Medwick stood grinning with his hands on his hips, just out of range of the bottles. A green apple rolled to his feet and he fielded that too. Umpires and attendants rushed out to left field and began picking up the mess. Medwick came back to the diamond. Little groups of players formed.

One cameraman ran out and leveled his box at the patch of inflamed and angry people all afire with mob hatred. In a moment the cameramen were all over the field, snapping first this and then that group. Medwick and Pepper Martin began to play a little game of pop-ball between themselves, Martin making the ball bounce of his bicep into Medwick's hand and Medwick whipping it up behind his back to Martin. The crowd began to chant in a swelling, choleric chorus, "Take him out, take him out."

Tries Second Time.

For the second time, Medwick started for his position and the storm, which had begun to lull, broke with renewed fury. More bottles and less fruit was thrown. The outfield was covered with attendants with bags, picking up the glassware as fast as it landed. One of them narrowly escaped being hit on the head. Some one in the dugout had sense enough to send a batter out with a sweater for Dizzy Dean, who was to win his second World Series game with a shutout, and whose arm was getting cold.

Once again Medwick returned while the field was cleared, and then for the third time tried to take his position. And he did a pretty brave thing. He trotted out and turned his back on the stands. Mobs are cowards, and the sight of courage inflames them beyond all reason. By far the most dangerous peal of rage broke from them the third time. Heavy milk bottles flew onto the field.

Police Stand By.

The police stood quietly by against the fence along the bottom row and did nothing except to guard the gate. "Take him out! Take him out!" The chant echoed and reechoed like a football yell. Mickey Cochrane, holding a bat, and distinguishable by the "No. 3" on the back of his uniform, ran half way into left field and with one gesture tried to pasify the mob. It had no more effect than throwing a pebble into the ocean. Cochrane returned to the diamond. The umpires walked around helplessly. The police did nothing. They were too few against 20,000.

Judge Landis from his box beckoned to Medwick, Frisch and Owen. They trotted into his box between home and first base. Umpire Klem joined them. There was a short discussion. Landis did the sane and reasonable thing.

Asks for Removal.

Flames were creeping near a powder mine. He extinguished that flame by asking Frisch to remove Medwick. Then only did this mad game continue.

During the next inning, Medwick, with a police escort, walked across the field and into the dugout. Once more the boos thundered. One more bottle was hurled at him and then he vanished and the crowd was satisfied. Unheard of in the annals of baseball, IT had worked its will, IT had taken an active and potentially terrible part in the ball game. When the thing was done, the poor Tigers were soundly whipped by the humiliating score of 11 to 0, and the crowd was half out, the pillow fight began and I looked down from the press box on the amazing sight, and boys and girls and women rolling on the ground in the dust and struggling with one another for the flat white pillows, in the grip of some strange inexplicable hysteria.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — Memories — By Harry J. Tuthill

THE MOMENT YOU SAID YOUR NAME HAD BEEN WREN, MRS. KARAMBA, I FELT AS THOUGH I, TOO, KNEW YOU BECAUSE GEORGE OFTEN SPOKE OF YOU.... A LONG TIME AGO.
OH I WAS SO SURPRISED WHEN I HEARD THE NAME GEORGE BUNGLE, I EVEN FORGOT TO ASK YOU FOLKS TO SIT DOWN. I'M SORRY.
GEORGE BUNGLE! THINK OF IT. OH HOW TIME FLIES. IT SEEMS ONLY YESTERDAY THAT MY FATHER WOULD WALK OUT ON OUR FRONT PORCH WHERE GEORGE WAS PLAYING THE MANDOLIN AND SAY, IT'S 10 O'CLOCK YOUNG MAN, GOOD NIGHT.
10! YOU WERE LUCKY. I HAD TO BE INSIDE BY 9:30, AND BY 9 IF GEORGE BROUGHT THE MANDOLIN.
THAT MANDOLIN! IT SEEMED DIVINE TO ME, BUT IT WAS ONE OF THE REASONS, I KNOW NOW, THAT MY FATHER TOOK ME WITH HIM ON A TRIP TO SOUTH AMERICA, WHERE I MET AND MARRIED SIRDAR.
THAT MUST HAVE BEEN WHAT MADE GEORGE LOOK SO MOURNFUL WHEN HE PLAYED A PIECE HE INSISTED WAS LA PALOMA.
LA PALOMA! YES, HE STARTED PLAYING IT JUST BEFORE I WENT AWAY. OH IT JUST CHILLS A PERSON TO THINK HOW LONG AGO THAT WAS.
ISN'T THAT TRUE? HOW TIME DOES FLY.
LA PALOMA! YES I CAN REMEMBER THAT. THOSE WERE THE DAYS.

Old Remedies.

About a hundred years ago there was a plague in New York town, and yellow fever laid men low as fast as they could tumble down. Then able doctors rushed around, they had no time to sleep or eat, they dished up powders by the pound, and dope in bottles all complete. They did their best but didn't know what caused that fierce and dread disease, they only knew it wouldn't go until there came a heavy freeze. They did their best, as writers tell in memoranda of that day; they tried to make their patients well, and only planted them in clay. Preventive measures were their hope, and these they fostered with a will, and they prescribed such wondrous dope as gives the modern doc a chill. The doctors called on Hiram Heck, who had some symptoms strange and vague; "A ball of camphor at your neck," they said, "will save you from the plague. If further symptoms come your way, with spasms in your joints and thews, inhale the fumes of burning hay, and keep some garlic in your shoes." And so the doctors toiled and guessed, and could but little progress make and scores and hundreds went to rest denouncing science as a fake. But science kept its tireless march along the yellow fever trail, determined it would knock the starch from such diseases, punk and stale. But finally from old Japan, where science had no wide renown, there came a little earnest man who learned the truth and nailed it down. He found mosquitos caused the scourge that filled the graveyards on the hill, and other docs began to forge the weapons which have slain that ill.
